HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Sunday, February 10, 1907.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Hon. William C. Lovering, of Massachusetts, Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we are met here on this holy day in memory of the men to whom the hour is set apart that their virtues may be extolled and a proper and just estimate placed upon their public service that those who come after them may be inspired by their example. This is fitting, since the life and perpetuity of our Republic depend upon individual loyalty and patriotic service. and character of these men measure up to the high estimate of American citizenship. We thank Thee for what they did in their respective cities and States and for what they did here on the floor of this House for the people of our Republic. We thank Thee for the blessed hope of the immortality of the soul, that men's deeds not only live after them, but that the soul goes marching on to larger attainments. Comfort, we beseech Thee, the colleagues, friends, and kindred of these men that some-how, somewhere, they shall meet again and be forever blest through the dispensation of God's eternal love and providence, and glory and honor be Thine forever in Jesus Christ our Lord.

Amen. The Journal of the proceedings of vesterday was read and approved.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES-HON. ROCKWOOD HOAR.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Speaker, coming here as the successor of Rockwood Hoar, I am glad to speak of his life on this occasion in the place where his last work was done and where he is so much beloved.

We were nearly of the same age; we were both born in Worcester; we had the same friends; we were graduated at the same college.

As a boy he was manly, generous, chivalrous, fond of study, active in sports—ambitious to excel in whatever he undertook. His ideals were of the highest, and the characteristics of the boy remained the characteristics of the man.

His death not only terminated a useful life, but removed from the rolls of public men a name that from colonial days has had a conspicuous place in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and in the nation.

Concord was the home of his family, a town rich in its associations with our history, our literature, and our philosophy.

In 1775, "on the 19th of April, the curtain rose on that mighty drama in the world's history of which the quiet villages of Lexington and Concord were the appointed theater.

Here lived and wrote and talked Emerson, Thoreau, and Hawthorne. Here Samuel Hoar was born in 1778, of whom Emerson said, "His character made him the conscience of the community in which he lived."

Samuel Hoar's father, two grandfathers, and three uncles were at Concord bridge, in the Lincoln company, of which his father was lieutenant.

He was distinguished among the great lawyers who then adorned the Massachusetts bar. The Commonwealth selected him to test in Charleston the constitutionality of certain laws of South Carolina relating to the imprisonment of negro seamen, but the temper of the times prevented the carrying out of the purpose

Harvard College chose him to protect its interests when the legislature sought to change its corporate form, and of his service then President Walker said: "Other men have served the college; Samuel Hoar saved it."

He was a member of the Massachusetts legislature and was for one year in Congress, succeeding Edward Everett for the Middlesex district in 1835.

In 1812 Samuel Hoar married a daughter of Roger Sherman, of Connecticut. His three sons were all lawyers. ter practicing for a time successfully on the Pacific coast, came back to Concord to spend his remaining years in his garden and among his books. Ebenezer Rockwood filled a large place in the public affairs of Massachusetts and of the nation. He was a great lawyer, was judge of the court of common pleas, justice of the supreme judicial court, Attorney-General in Grant's first Cabinet, and Member of Congress. Lowell well described him when he said:

The jedge who covers with his hat More wit and gumption and shrewd Yankee sense Than there are mosses on an old stone fence.

The third son, George Frisbie Hoar, was born in Concord in 1826 and moved to Worcester in 1849, for the reason, as he has said, that-

That city and county were the stronghold of the new antislavery party, to which cause I was devoted with all my heart and soul.

Here, in 1853, Mr. Hoar married Mary Louisa Spurr, a woman of great personal charm, who died in 1859. Her grandfather, Gen. John Spurr, of Charlton, Mass., was one of the Boston Her mother was descended from Rev. John Camptea party. bell, the first minister of Oxford, Mass., whose line runs back to the early Scottish chiefs, and among her ancestors are men who served in the colonial wars and in the war of the Revolution. A brother of Mrs. Hoar, Thomas Jefferson Spurr, a graduate of Harvard University, received a commission in the Fifteenth Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers, was wounded at Antietam and died in September, 1862, of whom it was said: "He was loving and tender and brave and heroic." Of such an ancestry Rockwood Hoar was born in Worcester, August 24,

He prepared for college in the public schools of Worcester and entered Harvard in the class of 1876. This was the college of his family, of which Leonard Hoar was an early president, where many of the name had graduated and on whose governing boards his father, uncle, and cousins had served at different times. Rockwood was an excellent student, serious minded, and a considerable reader, greatly liked by those who knew him well, and respected by all his classmates. He had great pride in the achievements of his family and an earnest desire to do his part in maintaining the high standards for which the name had always stood. After graduation he read law in his father's office in Worcester, and later was graduated from the Harvard Law School, in 1878, and was admitted to the Worcester County bar in 1879. He at once entered upon the general practice of the law and always held a prominent place at the bar. He was assistant district attorney for Worcester County from 1884 until 1887, and was district attor-ney for two terms, from 1899 until 1905. He performed the duties of this important office in a spirit that was just, generous, and sympathetic. He was councilman in the city of Worcester for four years, ending in 1891, during which year he was president of the council.

He was an aid-de-camp on the staff of Governor Oliver Ames from 1887 until 1890 and judge-advocate on the staff of Governor Roger Wolcott from 1897 until 1900, and during the Spanish war was chairman of the board charged with equipping the Massachusetts troops.

He was always prominent in the educational, literary, and church life of the community in which he lived, and rendered faithful service in governing boards of the public institutions of the State. Like his father he could always be relied upon to champion the cause of the weak, the unfortunate, and the oppressed.

In his home life he was at his best, most tender and affectionate in his relations with his family.

It was with the deepest satisfaction that he entered upon his service in Congress. It began just as the long and distinguished career of his father ended. Possibly a consciousness that much was expected of him may have stimulated him to efforts too great for his physical strength. I know that when engaged in his committee work of the revision of the statutes he said to a friend, who urged him not to overtax himself, that his uncle when in Congress had been occupied in the same work, and that he considered it a great honor to have an opportunity to participate in it. Of his service here others will speak; that it was of a character highly satisfactory to his constituents is evidenced by the fact that he was renominated without opposition.

Mr. Hoar was taken ill in September and died November 1. the progress of his disease, tumor of the brain, being beyond the power of human skill to stay. His two cousins, sons of Judge Ebenezer Rockwood Hoar, have died within a few years—Sherman, in 1898, who served in the Fifty-second Congress and was United States attorney for the Massachusetts district, whose labors in behalf of our soldiers returned from the Spanish war induced the disease which ended his life at the early age of 38; and Samuel, a lawyer of great attainments and reputation, a fine type of rugged American citizenship, who died in Concord less than three years ago in his fifty-ninth year. Of this great race of patriots, lawyers, statesmen, and scholars, Rockwood Hoar was the last of the men of his name and generation conspicuous in the affairs of his State and of the nation.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, when Rockwood Hoar entered the House at the opening of this Congress he looked forward confidently to a long term of service, and his constituents had every reason to expect for him a career of exceptional usefulness not only to them, but to the nation. He was well equipped for service in this body, for he brought to the discharge of his public duties a well-trained and scholarly mind, sound judg-ment, ripe experience as a lawyer who had dealt with large professional and business interests, combined with firmly established principles. Rockwood Hoar came of a long line of Puritan ancestors, many of whom rendered distinguished services to their Commonwealth and to the nation. The question is often asked. What is the chief trait that has been handed down to their descendants by the Puritans of New England? It is a certain stability and erectness of intellect that glories in a fearless devotion to a principle when the crowd is hurrying another way. Many a large man of bluff manners and a boisterous independence of speech and of undoubted physical courage mentally and morally slouches and leans upon the sterner, truer intellects of men of greater uprightness of mind. The true descendant of the Puritans is the man who, while he may have discarded many of the grim beliefs and somber practices of his forefathers, still rejoices, as they did, in a sort of sublime devotion to truth for Such a man is never a hypocrite in religion, a trimmer in politics, a time-server in morality, or a weathercock in his friend-Ralph Waldo Emerson was a true and noble descendant of the Puritans. So was Samuel Hoar, his friend and neighbor at Concord, the grandfather of our colleague, a learned lawyer and broad-minded philanthropist, who served in this House in the Twenty-fourth Congress. So was our colleague's father, the illustrious Senator, who through a long public service gave many illustrations of this fearless devotion to absolute truth in the performance of his public duties. So was Rockwood Hoar, and it is this shining trait in his character which comes prominently before my mind at this time.

One of the pleasantest features, Mr. Speaker, of service in this body is the bringing together in our mature life of the friends and associates of our childhood and youth. What the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Washburn] has spoken of this morning reminds me that in 1876 Rockwood Hoar, Mr. Justice Moody, and I, together with other classmates, met in one of the small upper rooms in old University Hall at Harvard College, in the popular course of Roman law, in which we all took a great interest, owing largely to the inspiring methods of our teacher. No one of us, at that time surely, ever dreamed that thirty years thereafter we should meet together here in Washington in the public service.

Those who met him first on this floor soon recognized this trait, for he often gave quiet evidences of it. I remember one occasion early in the last session when his attitude called forth approving applause from his fellow-Members who differed with him in their views. A rising vote was taken on a question involving indirectly the policy of the Government toward our new possessions. The great majority of the House, regardless of political divisions, had voted in the affirmative. Ordinarily a new Member of the House finds himself voting almost automatically with the majority. It is the easy, the popular, and therefore the natural thing to do. But the Puritan mind never looks for the easy or the popular thing, and when the noes were called for on this vote ROCKWOOD HOAR stood up for the truth as he saw it to the surprise of those Members who did not know him, but with the admiring approval of all. He vo father would have voted under similar circumstances. He voted as his

It was my good fortune to know Rockwood Hoar as a kinsman, as a classmate at college, as the friend who stood beside me during the most important event of my life, and as an associate in our service in this House, and I know that in his death a strong, true nature has left us. But while we lament our apparent loss let us not forget that the influence of such a life never perishes.

ROCKWOOD HOAR was the finest type of the descendants of the Puritans, and during his life and at the hour of death he nobly maintained the loftiest traditions of his race. us an example of how a modern Puritan should live and how an ancient Puritan could die.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, only those who knew Rockwood HOAR can appreciate the great loss his country suffered in his death. He had unfolded to his friends a fine capacity for public service which he did not have a full opportunity to exhibit He was permitted to serve only a single session to the country. He was permitted to serve only a single session in the House of Representatives—a session that was passed in familiarizing himself with the procedure, in becoming acquainted with his colleagues, and in learning exactly the character of his new duties. That he would have distinguished himself in a longer service there can be no manner of doubt. He had many of the qualities that made the career of his father illustrious—the insight to see clearly into the meaning of things; the power to give adequate expression to his thought; industry; an unbending courage and spirit of independence, and shrewd, penetrating, Yankee common sense. Much as he owed to inheritance, he owed as much, if not more, to education. He was trained in the best schools, but far better than the best schools must be reckoned the influence of his father and the splendid ideals which he illustrated in his life. Our colleague [Mr. BOUTELL] has referred to one of his votes in the House which shows his independence of mind and his sympathy with his father in the latter's heroic and ever-memorable struggle in behalf of the people of the Philippine Islands. Rockwood Hoar was a man who took a wholesome and hopeful outlook, and the words of Emerson may well be applied to the view according to which he lived his inspiring and noble

Life is too short to waste

God speed the mark.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. Speaker, Rockwood Hoar was the scion of families distinguished in the annals of two States. One of his ancestors, Roger Sherman, as a representative of Connecticut in the Continental Congress, signed the Declaration of Independence, and the Hoar name has been identified with the public life of Massachusetts from Revolutionary days to the present. Upon several occasions two members of this distinguished family were prominent in public life at the same time, and their independence of thought and catholicity of mind was shown by the fact that, while rendering good and loyal service to the country, they frequently disagreed upon political ideals and principles.

Coming from a stock of such renown, it may truthfully be said that more in the way of capacity and achievement was expected of Rockwood Hoar than of the ordinary man who entered this great representative body when he became a Member of the Fifty-ninth Congress. His great father, the late Senator Hoar, beloved by all the people of his State, in the rich fullness of his years of great and distinguished service, had recently passed from these scenes to meet in another world the reward of an honorable life.

It is given to but few men of any day or generation to have the strength of character, the beauty of disposition, the depth of mind, the power of statement, the aptness of illustration, the height of eloquence and soul-stirring power of oratory of George Frisbie Hoar.

The service of ROCKWOOD HOAR in this body was all too brief to get a complete view of his distinguished talents and ability. The earnest study which he gave to the great subjects of national legislation, the independence of view which he showed, the wisdom of the conclusions which he drew, proved clearly that he had great capacity for thought and leadership, which, ripened and strengthened by experience, would have placed him on a high level among his associates and given additional luster to the honored name he bore.

Rockwood Hoar brought to the National Legislature of his country many rich gifts of mind and character. He had the broad and liberal culture given by the university course of Harvard, widened and deepened by the thorough training of its law school. Unlike many men of education, breeding, and social position, he did not disdain the humbler spheres of public life, but gave to his native city of Worcester, in the legislative branch of its government, the benefit of his training, culture, and excellent judgment. He regarded such work as an honorable duty and discharged it with faithfulness and honesty.

His public service of most usefulness and of most distinction previous to his entrance into the sphere of national legislation was in the line of his profession as district attorney of the county of Worcester. He discharged his duties with energy, ability, and punctuality. He had all the characteristics of a good prosecuting officer—determined, aggressive, vigorous, and possessing a high degree of executive force, quick to decide and to act. He was always ready to fight strenuously for what he knew was right. Compassionate and generous-hearted by nature, he was equally ready to temper justice with mercy; to spare the weak, help the unfortunate, defend the injured and oppressed, and to relieve the distressed. He had a horror of the law's delays, and suggested and obtained a number of improvements in court procedure and legislation which were of benefit to the tribunals, the accused, and the community.

He viewed all his duties and responsibilities seriously, and accepted them with a loyalty and a single-mindedness of purpose which commanded admiration and respect.

In his personal attributes he was a lovable man, though his manner was often brusque and his speech aggressive. Through this outward bluntness and seeming roughness, however, shone such an honesty of intention, straightforwardness, and candor that it possessed a strong attractiveness in its evidence of his sincerity and manliness. Like all courageous men, he was at heart gentle and generous, and he never, even though secure in his positions of power, wounded by insinuation, invective, or scorn.

In his moments of relaxation he showed a boyish light-heartedness, a pleasant and wholesome humor, and a quick and apsympathy. His private life was clean, wholesome, and honorable. Of the serene contentment and happiness of his family life, which we all saw and knew, it is not my place here to speak.

To whatever higher point his talents and abilities would have carried him had his life been spared we may not know. But this we do know, that his standing among his fellow-men would never have been measured by his success in amassing wealth. It would have been in appreciation of his work for the uplifting and the benefit of his people and his country and in a sincere admiration of his character. For, above all else, the respect for ROCKWOOD HOAR among men was for the sterling qualities of his strong character.

In these days when stories, in many cases true, of dishonesty and dishonor in public and in business and professional life are rife, it is being borne in on the people with ever-increasing force that the future life of the nation, its success or failure, does not depend on the culture, the brilliancy, the talent, the ability of its leaders in legislative or business life, but in the honesty and uprightness of their character.

No taint of corruption or dishonor ever stained the purity of ROCKWOOD HOAR'S probity. His character was too strong to be vitiated by the enticements of luxury and wealth. In the light of his light and example we can safely believe that the days of honesty, of honor, of high ideals, are not over in the Commonwealth and in the nation, and that the underlying moral firmness of character among our people assures the future welfare of the Republic.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, it so happened that without any previous acquaintanceship with Rockwood Hoar before he became a Member of this Congress, I afterwards was in, perhaps, more intimate daily contact with him than any man in the House. Therefore it is fitting that I should bear testimony to the very valuable, quiet work that he did-a work unknown to most of the Members of the House. He was appointed a member of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, the labor of which was very constant and unremitting. He brought to that work a knowledge of the law, a determination, and a high-mindedness possessed by few men, and without regard to the fact that the work of necessity would never be known or appreciated save by a limited number of people, he gave liberally of his time and energy during his whole service in the House. The questions that came before the committee were varied and difficult enough to test thoroughly the character of the man and the workings of his mind. The one trait that shone forth above all was the trait that has been spoken of by others here to-day, and that was the absolute integrity of his mind. Most men have honesty, as we commonly know the term, but honesty in the final analysis, as it applies to the workings of the intellect, is one of the rarest as it is perhaps the greatest of gifts. He never hesitated to follow the conclusions of his intellect no matter where they led. But this integrity of mind was wholly free from any dogmatism. Limited, as all men are, by his ancestry, limited by environment, by association, and by training, yet repeatedly when his natural disposition in a given direction was found to run counter to what proved to be the law and the settled will of the whole country, there would be a willing acquiescence in such judgment that showed not the least evidence of reluctance in yielding his own personal views.

I knew him also in a personal way because out of the labor that we were together engaged in grew up a warm personal friendship. He was always the gentleman, illustrating the true meaning of that word, a gentle man-a man who thought kindly-who was always generous, happy in his association with his fellow-men; and because he was never suspicious of other men's motives, never needed to do anything from a politic motive, but simply out of his faith in mankind, he gave to the world what he expected from it-honesty and fair dealing.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, not quite two years ago there was held in this House a memorial service to a great Senator. Death had taken from Massachusetts her foremost citizen. people of that Commonwealth loved and respected Senator Hoar, because through a long and noble life he had shown courage, self-sacrifice, a high sense of duty, and an absolute fidelity to the highest ideals. Though a man of undoubted loyalty to the State his object had ever been his whole country. It is not surpris-ing, therefore, that when he passed away sorrow was not con-fined within the limits of Massachusetts, but that from every State in our Union there came sincere expressions of a sense of And when the Members of this House gathered here to offer their tribute to the patriot who had gone men from all sections and of differing political faith eagerly bore testimony to their affection for him and to their admiration of his great abilities, the purity of his life, and the nobility of his character.

A few days after the death of this beloved statesman the Republicans of the Third Congressional district of Massachusetts, at a convention held in the city of Worcester, chose Rockwoon Hoar, the Senator's only son, as their candidate for Representative in Congress. The people who had so long followed and honored the father knew that the son would not be unmindful of his noble heritage and emphatically ratified the nomination at the polls. On the first Monday of December, 1905, Rockwood HOAR took the oath of office and began his work here with every promise of a long and useful life in the public service. But that promise was not to be realized. A few months went by and then his colleagues, who in that brief time had learned to love and esteem him, were shocked by the sad announcement that he had passed away.

It is in accord with an honored custom of this House that this day has been set apart for heartfelt tributes to the memory of an able and devoted associate. Rockwood Hoar was brave, straightforward, and honorable. He was direct and genuine. Despising humbug, sham, and hypocrisy, he rang true in all the There was nothing negative about him. relations of life. Active and practical in whatever position he was placed, he became a positive force and made his influence felt. He thought for himself and had developed those qualities so essential to suc--courage and self-reliance. During his short service in the House he, on more than one occasion, showed that courage and independence of which I speak. He had convictions and spoke and voted here in accord with those convictions. While he was an active working Republican, a partisan, who believed sincerely in the principles and purposes of his party, he never hesi-tated to vote against that party when he believed it to be wrong.

Before coming to Congress Mr. Hoar had played an active part in the life of his city and county and State. Wherever there was a demand for disinterested work he was ready to do his share and always labored for that which was highest and best. He was very industrious and his work was characterized by intelligence and earnestness of purpose. He entered upon his work as a Member of Congress with great enthusiasm, was constant in his attendance, and showed unflagging industry in the important work of the committees to which he had been assigned. It is certain that he would have gained a position of influence. Honors would have come to him through the faithful performance of public duties, for his life here would have been characterized above all else by an unyielding devotion to duty.

Senator Hoar shortly before his death said: "It has been the good fortune of the Massachusetts delegation of late years that they have been a band of brethren and friends, increasing the influence of the old Commonwealth by cordial cooperation in everything that has made for her interest or for the interest of the country as her people conceive it." It was in that spirit of country as her people conceive it." It was in that spirit of friendship and fraternity that Rockwood Hoar became a member of our delegation. We perform no perfunctory duty to-day and shall forever sacredly cherish the memory of this friend who proved himself so kind and helpful an associate. His noble manhood and lovable personality can not fail to be a genuine inspiration during the years that are to come. It is therefore indeed fitting that we should record here our affection for him and our appreciation of his honorable and useful life.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I want to add but a word or two as tribute to the memory of Rockwood Hoar. I count it as one of the pleasantest experiences that I have had in this Congress that in the distribution of seats it was my good for-tune to be placed next to him. I think I never in my maturer years have made an acquaintance which so quickly ripened into friendship. Seeing him every day, talking with him during much of the session, I can say that from his expressions and from his actions I think he was a man who never offended his own conscience. I do not think that there would have been any consideration that would have made Mr. Hoar do anything that he did not believe was right. There was another sterling quality in him. He had that pride of great and distinguished ancestry that made it his ambition not only not to sully the reputation of that ancestry, but to add to its luster. His pride of ancestry did not beget supineness, but it stimulated industry and ambition to do well.

The last time that I saw him was on the other side of the water, and he was looking forward with such anticipation of pleasure at returning here to his work, especially upon that committee of which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sher-LEY] has spoken, that it was as if he could scarcely wait to have the time pass when he could get back here in harness again. But it was not to be; and so not only his friends from Massachusetts, but all who have had any association with him on committee or on the floor of this House, must think of him only as a dear and tender memory.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Speaker, as we meet to-day for the purpose of recording our words of tribute to the memory of one of our lamented colleagues, I am reminded of the uncertainty of human life and how brittle is the thread which binds us together in our earthly careers.

As Rockwood Hoar had always resided in a portion of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts remote from the city in which I reside, I had seldom met him until he took his seat in the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress and began his Congressional life. Frequent conferences of the Massachusetts delegation upon matters relating to the political and material interests of the State brought me into more intimate relations with him. I had known his father, the late Senator Hoar, for many years, and I thought I discerned in the son some of the prominent features which made the father one of the best beloved of the long line of public servants who had been called upon to serve the great Commonwealth in the stirring periods of the nation's life.

ROCKWOOD HOAR had convictions upon public questions which he never hesitated to assert. Sometimes I noticed, when the roll was called, he and I were found recorded in opposition to each other, but I always felt that he had been guided by his conscientious convictions. His father had never sought to look for popular acclaim, and Massachusetts always held him in the highest esteem, and her citizens gave to him their continuous confidence and support even when many of her most prominent men were inclined to look upon some public questions in a manner very much different than he had freely and frankly expressed himself.

ROCKWOOD HOAR gave promise of a distinguished career, and if his life had been spared to the general allotted period of manhood, his record of accomplishment would have brilliantly adorned the pages of history. He had barely passed the half century of life, and apparently had many years of usefulness before him. He came from sturdy Puritan stock. Naturally he was a student. With his home training and the advantage accorded by the public school system of the city of Worcester he was enabled to graduate from Harvard College in his early youth, and only a few years thereafter he engaged in the practice of law, became assistant district attorney, and subsequently district attorney, which last position he occupied at the time of his election to Congress.

His quiet demeanor and peaceful appearance would not lead one to think that he had an aptitude for military life, but he served as a private in the Massachusetts militia and also on the military staff of two governors of the Commonwealth, once serving as judgeadvocate-general, besides being president of a military board of advisers during the Spanish war. In these capacities he was fulfilling the high duties of American citizenship, inherent in his nature from the ancestral stock from which he sprang in the town of Concord, where the earlier conflicts of the Revolution first awakened the patriotic natures of the sturdy farmers to the laying of the foundation of the Republic which it was his ambition to serve faithfully and well.

He was assigned by Speaker Cannon to the Committees on Elections and on Revision of the Laws. These committees were engaged in a line of work which was congenial to him, and I frequently heard his associates speaking in the highest terms of his very faithful and efficient service. If his life had been spared, the entire membership of the House would have had an opportunity to have estimated his public service by the standard which those associated with him in committee work were enabled to place upon him. The work of the revision of the laws is of great importance, and during the long period of his first session in Congress he gave to that work his best talent. The result has been printed, and it will add to the glory of his earthly accomplishments, and it will be of immense advantage to countless millions of his countrymen in their future transactions in the courts of law and in the extension of their commercial relations in the activities of business life.

Mr. Hoar seemed to enjoy his work here. He was ambitious to be useful because of the good he could do for others. There was no apparent selfishness in his nature. His wife and children seemed happy and contented, and to the ordinary citizen there would seem to be every element which marked the prospect of success and a long and brilliant career. But the all-wise Ruler of the Universe, by causing "the silver cord to be loosed and the golden bowl to be broken," finished the work which human wisdom had regarded unfinished. We can not penetrate the mystery of death. It attacks the youth, with his years of hope and promise of future fulfillment, and sooner or later all must yield to its dread call. And we who are permitted to remain to fulfill our earthly careers must take up the burden where our colleagues have laid it down.

It was my privilege to be appointed one of the committee to pay the last tribute of respect to his lamented father, and also I was assigned to the same sad duty to my departed colleague. The services of both were held in the same church. The citizens of Worcester attended the obsequies in large numbers, and there was an expression of grief that pervaded the entire community.

I shall cherish the memory of our departed colleague, and willingly pay this feeble tribute to his worth and work.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, in the first days of the Fifty-ninth Congress I met for the first time Rockwood Hoar. It was my good fortune to be assigned to committee work with this man. As members of the same subcommittee of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, requiring detailed and continuing work, we were thrown very closely together, and I had the opportunity in the intimate association in which we were necessarily thrown to observe very fully the manner of man he was. The character of this committee work seemed congenial to the tastes and preference of the man, and he at once impressed me with the enthusiasm and spirit that inspired him in the work. He brought to this labor a great deal of knowledge and research. In addition to the marked ability that was manifest there was a sense of justice that stood out so prominent in all his expression of views that his opinion commanded at-tention and respect always. He was earnest, yet in no sense dogmatic or arbitrary. While he was tenacious and loyal in his views, yet he was ever painstaking and careful in the consideration he gave to the opinions of others. He was a modest man, a trait so becoming to man as well as woman.

There are many here who know the life and character of the distinguished dead better than I, but I trust that although a stranger to him until a few short months before his death that it is meet that I should express my regard for the man and pay my tribute of respect and love to his memory to-day. When I had known him a few days I felt that I had met a man and a brother. My heart went out to him in perfect trust. He was gentle, cordial, and kind, yet there was a manly dignity about him that spoke courage and strength. His was a charming personality. In manner he was affable and without restraint; in conversation he was winning indeed.

His ready speech flowed fair and free In phrase of gentlest courtesy. He came from a family noted in several generations for their patriotism and distinguished public service. To those who came in contact with Rockwood Hoar it is unnecessary to say that his early environments and advantages were of the highest order. He was the result of the best conditions of our day and times and a credit to our civilization. He bore the visible stamp of this degree, and it is a matter of just pride to belong to a race and a civilization of which he was the natural product.

His public service and life history I leave to others to tell. I only speak of the man—the individual, as he impressed me. While he was a worthy scion of a noble stock, with a lineage illustrious and great, yet in him was illustrated that—for while he was of noble lineage and gentle blood, to my mind the richest grace and strength of his life and character was imparted by his own kind heart and gentle faithful soul.

In his right hand he carried gentle peace-

And he was-

To those that sought him sweet as summer.

I sought him and so I found him. I conceived for him an affectionate regard that will abide with me. It enlarges the ideals of life to have known such a man. It gives a richer conception of manhood, and, to myself, I hold it a blessing to have known him. This acquaintance was of short duration—seven months embraced it—but that time was long enough for me to form a lofty estimate of the man, and I esteem it a privilege to bring my offering to-day and join in with those who knew him long and well in paying my humble tribute to his memory.

He was at the high tide of a useful and promising career when he was called to go and his friends left to mourn.

The voice of the weeper
Wails manhood in glory,
The autumn winds rushing
Waft the leaves that are serest,
But our flower was in flushing
When blighting was nearest.

Why this, to our short sight, untimely breaking of the bands of mortality; why this dispensation we can not answer; we do not ask. It is the inscrutable decree we can not fathom, but it is the will that must be done and that we must accept. Have we the power to accept it with resignation? Let us hope for that power, that gift. We now see through a glass darkly; let us trust and abide in the hope of that brighter vision yet to come, for the eye of faith looks through the shadows and gloom of death, and hope makes radiant the shore beyond.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, while I esteem it a privilege to take part in these memorial exercises, I feel peculiarly ill fitted to put into words the adequate and deserved tribute which I know is due to the memory of my friend Rockwood Hoar. In this country we feel a just pride in the self-made man who, from an humble origin and unpropitious surroundings, rises to a position of influence and usefulness in the community, and it is natural that we should honor and applaud such a man and his accomplishments. Is there not equal reason to admire and praise that son of a distinguished ancestry who has not only maintained the high standards of his family, but has at the same time contributed to it some additional valuable quality, which is essentially true in the case of Rockwood Hoar? Few men can count among his ancestors so many who have reached the very highest rank in nearly every walk in life and in every period of our national existence. Among them were distinguished jurists, humanitarians, lawyers, educators, military men, statesmen and financiers, a president of Harvard College, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, a Senator from Consigner of the Decraration of Independence, a Senator from Connecticut, a Secretary of State, a Senator from New York, and an Attorney-General of the United States. In the direct line his grandfather was a distinguished lawyer, a valuable State officer, and Member of Congress; while his father, whose death was so generally mourned only two years ago, served his State for thirty-five years in the halls of Congress, leaving a heritage of duty well done unexcelled in the history of Massachusetts and probably not excelled in the country at large. George Frisbie Hoar retained his vigorous intellect and capacity for work until near his end, although he lived eight years beyond the allotted time of man, an age which strangely has marked the end of many members of his great family. And, while he was sincerely mourned not only by those associated with him in public life, but by all the people of Massachusetts, there should have been incorporated in this mourning a spirit of thankfulness for his long life and the great public work which he had been able to perform, a feeling that, though a great man had fallen, he had accomplished his life work, and that the time had come for him to pass his burdens on to others; and in a large sense this statement would hold true of all of the earlier members of this distinguished family.

But this normal and happy condition ended with the generation which included among its members Judge Ebenezer Rockwood Hoar and George Frisbie Hoar. The former left two sons, Samuel and Sherman. Samuel Hoar, like so many of his ancestors, was a distinguished lawyer, and his end came suddenly, when he was hardly past the prime of life; while Sherman Hoar, after being elected to Congress at an age when he was scarcely eligible, ended his life prematurely as a result of disease contracted in providing for and caring for our sick soldiers returned from Cuba during the Spanish war. The only remaining son of the family of his generation, and Senator Hoar's only son, was he whose memory we are gathered to-day to pay tribute to. It will be seen from what I have said that ROCKWOOD HOAR labored under that peculiar disadvantage which those descended from or connected with very distinguished persons must always face, and especially when, as in his case, the distinguished person is a father; for not only does he have to meet the natural criticism that whatever he does, either as a public man or in any semipublic capacity, is largely influenced, if not entirely due, to the recognized wisdom of the senior, but in the case of a son he very often, and properly, refrains from assuming public positions or semipublic duties for which he is amply fitted, feeling that such a course might adversely influence the future of his father. There is little reason to doubt that such motives governed Rockwood Hoar in his career prior to his election to Congress, for until his nomination to that office, which occurred the day his father was laid to rest, he had never held a political office other than those offices which were appointive and directly connected with his profession, the law; and such canvass as he had made for the nomination was only undertaken when it was apparent to all that the days of his father's political activities were numbered. There is no other suitable reason for his refraining until his fiftieth year from undertaking a political career, for which he was undoubtedly fitted to an unusual degree, in which he would have, without question, filled a place which, while possibly not as brilliant as that of his father or some others of his family, would have been an honor to himself and a satisfaction to his friends and constituency. I do not make this statement in the spirit of fulsome praise, for I would not offend his memory or my ideas of the proprieties of such an occasion as this by indulging in flattery, but I make it because there were certain characteristics which belonged in a degree to every member of his family. These characteristics were the foundation of their success, and they were quite as marked in Rockwood Hoar as in those who had preceded him; and so with our mourning for his untimely end is mixed a deep sense of regret that his work could not have been carried on to its full fruition.

I do not feel at liberty in the time allotted me to make a complete enumeration of the qualities to which I have referred or to take up the ones I do refer to in great detail, but a reference to a few of the more prominent will easily show that I am justified in making the statement.

All of the members of his family have been scholars, not always specialized scholars, but more frequently scholars developed and perfected by careful reading, travel, and the best associations. Rockwood Hoar was in this sense a scholar. While busily engaged in the active affairs of life, he kept in close touch with standard literature, and sought the companionship of the best people, and was an educated man; his studies had not ceased, and would not have done so as long as life lasted, so that it was natural to assume that if he had reached the allotted span of life he would have become one of the most accomplished of men.

All the members of his family have been idealists, not the kind of idealists whose enthusiasm led them to seek perfect conditions without the practical qualities which must be used in the improvement of mankind, but the reverse. Rockwood Hoar was the latter kind of an idealist. While we have not had in our generation to deal with a great moral question, like slavery, for instance, which has been convulsing in its character, yet there are always with us questions of right and wrong on which every man must take a stand. He could always be found on the side of the right, defending the oppressed, and attempting to uplift mankind by those practical methods which were a part of his everyday life.

All the members of his family had an intense patriotism, to which was allied a keen sense of public duty. One of these qualities should be a corollary of the other, for patriotism in ordinary times is not dying for one's country, but living for it, living to better it. He had no opportunity to show his love of country on the battlefield, but he did have the opportunity to help make his country a better one, and he never missed a citizen's opportunity to assist in bringing about better civic conditions or a better public service.

All the members of his family had a broad religious tolerance. His honored father especially, among his ancestors, displayed this quality to a marked degree. While having strong and pronounced views regarding the future life, nothing met his vigorous opposition more quickly or more surely stirred his combative temperament than any attempt to restrict religious belief or practice. Rockwood Hoar displayed the same characteristics. He was a liberal, a Unitarian in his religious belief, but being a liberal did not mean that he was vague or indefinite in his views or careless in their practice. He was the reverse, but he would have fought with all his resources any attempt to force on others views in which they did not believe or any attempt to discriminate against his fellow-men because their creed differed from his own. Neither did he proclaim one standard and live another.

Other members of his family, almost without exception, had vigorous prejudices and were combative to an unusual degree. They had a capacity to utter bitter sentences as well as an unusual loyalty toward those who had been tried and found not wanting. Rockwood Hoar had this latter quality. He may have had the second; though if so, he was extremely chary about using it. But in place of the first he had a charming and genial personality, and was entirely devoid of prejudice and of the combative temperament to which I have alluded. Therefore, if my estimate is not overdrawn, there is ample reason why the people of Massachusetts should have been shocked at his untimely taking away in the prime of life, for I believe political conditions were such that he might have been returned to this House again and again, better and better prepared to represent his people up to the highest standards of the past. There is also good reason why the Members of this House, without limitations to party lines, should feel that they have met a personal loss, for his honored name, his genial, sterling character, his gracious presence and bearing had drawn all to him in a way which promised unusual popularity and usefulness in Washington. Very few men have commenced their Congressional careers under more favorable auspices; very few have done more in one short year to convince those associated with them that their preparation was complete for a successful legislative career.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, in these days when so many doubts are expressed of the value to the individual and the nation of inherited wealth, it is refreshing, by contrast, to meditate on the life, character, and services of Rockwoon Hoar and in them observe the boon to the individual and the nation of inherited worth.

Seldom will it happen that a Member of this House is the son of a former Member who, too, was the son of a former Member. Rockwood Hoar was all this and more. In his veins coursed the blood of the embattled farmers who fought at Concord Ridge. Fit indwelling place was he for that—Spirit that made those heroes dare To die and leave their children free.

With a strong character, well-trained mind, wide experience, gentlemanly bearing, and high purposes, he combined sense of humor and geniality of soul that made his companionship a delight to his friends. In the short service that fate permitted him here many had come to recognize these qualities. The first time that he was called to the Chair in Committee of the Whole, the unusual compliment of applause was paid him, and that from both sides of the Chamber. Had he lived two characteristics of his would have become increasingly prominent. One would have been his usefulness as a legislator, due to his ability, industry, experience, and inherited knowledge of government. The other would have been his obedience to conscience—his courage to speak and vote as he was given to see the right, whatever the odds. A man of his upbringing, his culture, and his nobility of tradition had a perspective not possible to many. He would have stood a bulwark for the best in Anglo-Saxon evolution. He would have been strong in—

The strength that can not seek By deed or thought to hurt the weak.

Of ROCKWOOD HOAR there can well be said what was written of another of Massachusetts's noble sons:

He left the example of high powers nobly used and the remembrance of a spotless name.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, it is said that Oliver Cromwell once in answer to an inquiry from a portrait painter as to how he wished to be painted said, "Paint me with the wart." Our friend, I know, possessed a similar spirit and was one of those who could best afford to exhibit it. Like my colleague from the Thirteenth district, I had before coming to Congress read and re-read with pleasure, with interest, and with profit, the autobiography of the late Senator Hoar. His was one of those lives to which all look up, and when in the initial drawing of seats in the first session of this Fifty-ninth Congress I found myself immediately in front of a genial, dignified, courteous, fine-appearing man, it was one of the great additional pleasures of this service to find that that man was the son of Senator I appreciated it as a privilege at that time to be associated with one from such a distinguished ancestry, but it was only a matter of days before I learned to appreciate it as a pleasure, not only to associate with the son of Senator Hoar, but to form an acquaintance which ripened into friendship with ROCKWOOD HOAR. Our late friend was one of the most human men who ever came to Congress. I never met a man who ex-celled in doing the right thing in little things as did he. On the public side every thought was for his service here and for his service to his district. I had myself been educated in a school of practical politics, and yet it had never occurred to me, nor to colleagues of mine similarly situated, to send the Congressional Record to the fire houses in my district because there the men would have time to read them, but Rockwood Hoar thought of that. He had a large delegation from his district, ladies, come here during Easter vacation. Any man with the means could have thought of the delightful lunch which he gave them in the Capitol, but few besides Rockwood Hoar would have had the additional thought of giving to each one a session pass for the gallery signed with his own hand. He was loyal to his friends. There was a subject in which he and I were interested, in which our views were in accord. One day coming into the Chamber he said, "My friend, Mr. So-and-so" (here to-day), "is to make some remarks on this subject this afternoon on the opposite side. You have given a good deal of thought to this subject, and if you are mean enough to do it you can ask him questions and make suggestions that might tend to annoy or confuse him in some parts of it. If you do that, you will have me to deal with as long as we both stay here in Congress. He is sincere and as long as we both stay here in congress. He is sincere and entitled to his views and is entitled to have them go to his people in the way he wishes them, and I want to say to you that so far as you and I are concerned you interrupt him this afternoon at peril of our friendship."

It is hardly necessary to say that after that, knowing Mr. Hoar, I did not attempt any but helpful interruptions.

On that same subject he prepared a speech better than has ever been delivered in this branch of Congress in relation to that subject. He prepared it with toil, labor, thought, and genius. After the final vote had been taken he took it from his desk, handed it to me, and said, "Bennet, I wish you would read that." I did, and I said, "Hoar, why didn't you make that speech? It would have put you in the front ranks of the Members of this House in the Fifty-ninth Congress, no matter how long others have served." He said, "Those are my thoughts, my belief, and that is the way I voted, but the gentleman who led the opposition was from my own State and is my friend. In some ways I did not think he was being treated fairly, and I did not desire to nor would I add to his defeat the humiliation of an attack from a member of his own delegation."

Allusion has been made here to the occasion when Mr. Hoar was almost alone on this floor in a rising vote. I happened through the fact of sitting so close to him to be a very near witness on that occasion. He was a modest man, and it was a hard thing to do, and as I sat in my seat here I turned around and looked at him and saw him standing in the aisle gripping the desk on either side, with every muscle tense, but still standing.

One who has traveled through Massachusetts even to a limited extent can understand, I think, the spirit which animates such as our friend. It is the survival of the town meeting; it is reenforced by constant inspection of the memorials of brave deeds. It is in a way helped by the very air of the State. We lose much here through the going of Rockwood Hoar. I am glad that the occasion occurred to which my colleague from the Thirteenth district alluded, when he was greeted with applause on taking the chair, and I am confident that when that applause came the most surprised man in the House was its recipient. He never fully realized his position in the hearts of his friends, and such a token as that helped somewhat, I am glad to know, his realization of how he stood.

But while he was loyal to his friends mere friendship never led him on a vote. As my colleague from the Fifteenth district has said, we all know that his vote was in accordance with his conscience.

One day the friend of his on the opposite side of the Chamber to whom I have referred came and asked me to vote with him on a matter, not of large moment and to which I had given, I regret to say, rather scanty attention. I promised to do so and I did so. After my name on the roll was called came Mr. Hoar's, and when his name was called he voted the opposite way. I turned to him in some surprise and said, "Why, Hoan, why didn't you vote with our friend and me?" He said, "Because you are wrong;" and it would never have occurred to him to have done differently because of friendship.

Allusion has been made to his distinguished ancestry, but there is a consideration which I desire to suggest. In a sense it is a handleap to a man to come here the son of a great man. His performances are measured by standards hard to live up to. Rockwood Hoar worshiped the memory of his father, but I know upon one or two occasions when he was able to do something which his father had not been able to do that it was a source of some gratification to him to say, "This is the act of ROCKWOOD HOAR.

In that connection I recall a little thing in which our colleague who has just left us, Mr. Rixey of Virginia, was concerned, when he and Mr. Hoar secured the small appropriation for a road on the battlefield of Balls Bluff. Mr. Hoar had a tender regard for that place simply because Massachusetts men had fought there. He had an added pride in getting the appropriation because his father had twice tried to and failed.

We lose much, but those nearer and dearer lose more. not care, perhaps I could hardly trust myself, to speak upon that side, but I can simply say that the tenderness and solicitude which he evidenced here for his colleagues on both sides of the Chamber were magnified and intensified in his nearer relations.

I last saw him in life, to recall particularly, on a beautiful summer evening toward the close of the last session, and we sat and planned our work when we should come back. He spoke with joy of his coming European trip, and then with equal joy of the work he expected to do in the short session. The stars looked down, and in the beautiful balm of that summer evening there was no man who had a right to plan for the future better than he. We can not even guess as to these manifestations of Divine Providence. We know that he died in an assured belief, and we rejoice in that. The same stars look down now and the same balm of evening comes, but for Rockwood Hoar the mystery of what lies beyond those stars, what great hand guides the coming and the going of the balm of the evening has been solved. To him the window has been opened, the dawn has come, and he looks out not backward, but forward into life.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, the frail body is a vehicle carrying us down the pathway and through the avenues of life to no uncertain destination. Sooner or later, Mr. Speaker, you and I and all of us will reach the end of our journey and be called before the great presiding officer, there to report our compliance with or disregard for the rules written upon tablets of stone. Can we answer that we have had no other God save him alone? Can we answer that we have loved our neighbor as ourselves? Can we say, "Thou hast commanded, we have obeyed?" The taking from our midst of one we loved is to again remind us of the uncertainties of life. Can it be that a time was selected and ROCKWOOD HOAR exalted to impress us with the nearness of our approach to the great beyond?

It was my pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to serve with Mr. Hoar upon committee, and I had every opportunity to judge his very nature. No man could but be impressed with his kind and gentle disposition, his absolute fairness, his honesty of purpose, his high qualities of statesmanship, and his firm devotion to his duties, his country, his flag, and his God. He loved all mankind as his neighbor; he had a pleasant smile and a kind word for every Every inch of him was a man. I believe he lived a life the God intended all men should live.

We are taught that no man is perfect. If this be true, the imperfections of Rockwood Hoar were beyond the discernment of the human. Days and months and years will come and go, but the services of Rockwood Hoar are recorded in the history of his country, there to perpetuate his memory forever. And when in after years we turn back the pages of time, it will be said of him that he brought sunshine into the world and it is better for his having lived. He will be missed in the committee; he will be missed in this House. His place can never be filled in the hearts of his friends.

When I left this city last summer he was the last to say "good-by." Little did I think it was to say good-by forever. No, Mr. Speaker; I do not believe it was forever. He died, no doubt, as he wished to die, in the service of his country. He died as he lived-a man,

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, Massachusetts has played a prominent part in American civilization. From my earliest recollection our schoolbooks, our declamations, and our stories came from New England. The home of American literature We looked toward Boston Harbor as the early settlers did to Southampton and Liverpool. About old Cambridge town and Concord repose the remains of my father's ancestors who served their modest part in the primitive times of the Great Republic. Old South Church and Faneuil Hall are dear to the American name. It is no disparagement to Virginia, the mother of Presidents, and the home of my maternal ancestors, the Crawfords, to say that the fire of patriotic devotion to a wider liberty burned fervently in the Old Bay State, and that her sons always marched abreast of progress. At no period of American history is there a blank page for Massachusetts. The Hancocks, the Adamses, the Warrens, and Paul Revere are among the first of liberty's heroes. The Websters, the Sumners, the Wilsons, and the family of Rockwood Hoar embellish the achievements of the United States. They all had the reputation of doing all things well. They lived in the years which spoke to the centuries to come. Under their ringing strokes science was ascertained and out of superstition there came revealed religion. Puritanic they were, but generally open to reason and conviction. To pronounce a eulogy upon them is but to recite page from every chapter of our glorious history.

To Rockwood Hoar nature and an honorable ancestry seemed to have created a choice environment, and to have marked out a lengthy career.

An ancestor of his signed every charter of American liberty. A distinguished father had set a great example. His education was well planned and faithfully improved. In the public schools of Worcester he caught the inspiration of genius and the true American spirit. In far-famed Harvard he became a bachelor and master of arts. Although born in 1855, he yet succeeded to the bar in 1879. Chosen assistant district attorney for the middle district of his State from 1884 to 1887, his services were so well and favorably remembered that he became the district attorney from 1899 to 1905. In his community he took the active part of a useful man and was universally regarded as a conservation of the mallia read was universally regarded as a conservation of the mallia read was universally regarded as servator of the public good.

He and I came into the Congress of the United States together, and each of us succeeded a worthy Democrat. It being the first term to touch elbows with the lawmakers of the Union, we naturally stood at the distance of the discreet observer. "A fellow-feeling makes us wondrous kind," and so we became fast friends. I esteemed him as a man who lived as mothers would have their sons live, for he was faithful and true; and I looked upon him as a man who died as fathers would have their sons die, harnessed to duty, faithfully working out an honorable destiny. July was in his sunny heart, October was the friendship in his hand.

Some men in political life, and everywhere else for that matter, see only the passing error in things done. Rockwood Hoar observed the supreme purpose in transpiring events. There are served the supreme purpose in transpiring events. There are those who have picked their paths at the mountain's base so long that they see only the waning sun. The subject of our sketch breathed the morning ozone and watched the early orb of day brightening earth's duties and beauties. He was highly regarded for his moral and intellectual worth in Worcester. He was ardent and thorough in every duty and lent an honorable hand to every good cause among his neighbors.

In Congress he rendered distinguished service to his country on the Committee on Revision of the Laws, and his voice and vote were always given to legislation in recognition of the services of the soldiers who saved the country whole and the flag so glorious.

While living in comparison with a distinguished name, he yet did not shine by reflected light. He had capacity, ability, and great energy and honorable ambition. He had practical judgment and stood close to the people. He served well his city and his county at home, and he served his district and country well here.

His associates throughout his career from his earliest days in college to the last hour of his life were men worthy of an exalted life and a splendid manhood. It is said that the good things of the universe can not be defined. Neither can intellect or soul be defined. And, of course, immortality is entirely beyond human comparison and comprehension. The things that make for good are nevertheless understood and appreciated. The soul is a star which dwells apart and commands individual attention. The personality of Rockwood Hoar reenforced his mental calculation. He was original in thought and action. He contributed to the subject under consideration. He did not seek to dominate, but to elucidate. This is a quality which requires industry, study, and dispassionate reflection. With him oratory was not in the rhetorical roundness of a period, but in the aptness of the thought and the pleasing persuasion of its application.

It is not greatness I would attribute to our friend, but usefulness and a common importance belonging to a useful life. be, and not to seem, was this man's wisdom."

Cut down by the grim and unreasoning reaper at the milepost, where great and good manhood scarcely touches high twelve, he yet lived a life and in a time wherein his fifty years wrought a century of accomplishment. In high ideals he honored his day and generation; under the light of splendid example he nourished his household, and in manly devotion to duty he rounded out a life of satisfying success.

Man is no star, but a quick coal Of mortal fire; Who blows it not, nor doth control A faint desire, Lets his own ashes choke his soul.

IMr. TIRRELL addressed the House. See Appendix.1

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I did not have the pleasure of knowing the distinguished and lovable subject of this memorial occasion until I met him at the beginning of the present Congress, and I account myself greatly the loser because I was not fortunate enough to know him at an earlier period of his life, for after being intimately associated with him as a member of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States for seven long months I was constrained to believe that the world had been made better by the worthy life he had lived, and hence all who had been denied an acquaintance with him had been deprived of many of the social pleasures that come to mankind through the avenues of intimate association with the earth's noblest and gentlest sons. From the first moment of our acquaintance I was firmly impressed with the fact that a gentleman born and bred, in whom there was no guile, had joined the forces of legislative life, one who fairly lived the sacred sentiment of that grand old song that was sung in the long ago by stainless tongue upon Judea's lofty heights: "On earth peace, good will toward men." He was blessed with an open, honest face; a bright, intelligent eye; a mellow, winning voice; a proud, manly bearing; a courageous, but sweet spirit that was as full of fraternalism as anyone it was ever my privilege to know, a fraternalism that was intended by its Creator to be as free and as pure as the waters that flow from the fountains of eternal life, as harmonious among men as the notes of the song bird that are warbled forth as he rises from his night of rest and flaps the morning sun rays into a thousand glittering gems, as sweet and as sacred as the music that is flung by angelic fingers from the strings of angelic harps.

The fraternalism that animated and controlled his every act would have staved the murderous hand of a sin-cursed Cain, would have stifled the impetuous words of an angry Lot, would have prevented the theft of the birthright from innocent Esau, would have stopped the sale of Joseph into Egypt by his brethren, and would have brought a blush of shame to the cheek of unrighteous Saul to have even thought of hurling a javelin at the head of the youthful and sweet-spirited shepherd boy of the plains. The kind of fraternalism that found lodgment in his noble breast, though often and bitterly assailed, thank God has survived the tyranny of tyrants, the cruelties of bigot kings, the vices of avarice and greed, and the inhumanity of man to man. It has put bread into the mouths of millions of hungry souls and has clothed as many tattered forms. Mr. Speaker, if such fraternalism as that that guided and controlled the acts and words of the lamented Rockwood Hoar was lived and practiced by the peoples of the world every hovel would become a palace and every man and woman a saint. seemed to be his only taskmaster, and faithfully and efficiently did he meet and discharge every obligation that was laid upon him by that exacting overseer. When assigned to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, he discovered that its work had been sadly neglected for several years, and hence he found more than a double task before him if he and his colleagues on the committee were to revise the laws during the life of the Fifty-ninth Congress. It was his ambition that ere the gavel fell to tell of the close of the Congress that the laws would have been revised and the work of the committee ended. therefore entered upon the duties before him with great fidelity, energy, and superior intelligence, and never did he fail or falter in his work, no matter how many or how long the hours of labor or how voluminous or arduous the task. His Congressional career was short, but it was as successful, as complete, and useful as that of any Member of that body of which I have knowledge whose term of service was not longer than his.

I therefore beg of his constituents to know that in his election no mistake was made and that in honoring him they honored themselves to a high degree. He was alike the son of an illustrious sire and of a proud State, but the knowledge of that fact did not seem to make him feel that he was any better than the humblest citizen of our broad land, if that citizen was only honest. He despised bigotry, and pharisaical professions were abominations in his sight. He possessed none of the elements of the demagogue and under all conditions dared to do the right. He was ever courteous, generous, and kind. While his carriage was that of a proud man, his head was never held so high as not to see the humblest of his fellows as he passed them by. As indicated at the beginning of my remarks, I was not acquainted with his early life, but if his boyhood and early manhood are to be judged by that period of his life familiar to me, I am constrained to believe that no act of his ever brought sorrow to a loving mother's heart or a flush of shame to a proud father's face. I am sure that he impressed himself upon everyone and everything with which he had to do in a most favorable manner, and, in my judgment, if he had not been stricken down in the flower of his manhood he would have made an imprint upon the institutions of his country that the relentless forces of time and tide only could have effaced. He was too broad of mind and great of soul to be a petty partisan or a narrow sectionalist, and in none of the many conversations that I had with him did I ever hear him utter an unkind word concerning any section of our Union or any of its citizens. While he was supremely proud of his native State, he did not regard it as the wheel that moved the world or its capital city the hub around which it revolved.

He believed in the rights of individuals, communities, and States, and he thought that every individual, community, and State, no matter where domiciled or located, possessed the very same rights and was entitled to the very same considerations. Little did I think, when he gave my hand a warm, friendly clasp at the close of the last session of Congress, that it was for the last time. But the fates decreed that it should be, for only a few short months after our friendly parting the sad news came to me that he had departed this life. But, sir, I am in a measure consoled by the thought that he so lived while upon this earth that when he came to die he did not go to his grave like a "quarry slave, scourged to his dungeon," but, comforted and sustained by thoughts of noble deeds well performed. he was able to "wrap the drapery of his couch about him and lie down to pleasant dreams."

Mr. Speaker, truly a just man has been called to his well-Peace to his ashes and joy to his soul. earned reward.

Oh, may the shaft that keeps silent watch over his sacred tomb be able to withstand the tempest's fiercest blow; may the sun shine brightest above the spot where lies his precious remains, and may flowers sweetly bloom around his untimely grave until time, in its last revolution, breaks on eternity's shore, and his great soul rest in the bosom of his Lord forever and forever, is the earnest prayer of his southern friend.

Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is with feelings of pleasure mingled with sadness that I unite with others in this House in paying just tribute to the memory of Hon. Rock-WOOD HOAR, late Representative from the State of Massachusetts, whose life and character we are here to commemorate and whose death we deplore.

Although my personal acquaintance with him was limited and of short duration, I esteem it as a high privilege to unite with others who had known him longer and better in commemorating his many virtues.

I first met the distinguished Congressman at the beginning of the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, and although strangers at the time, our acquaintance soon ripened into warm personal friendship.

During that session I had the honor to serve with him on the Committee on Elections No. 2, before which contests of a very heated and highly partisan character were pending. Although we differed as widely as the north pole from the south on questions of public policy, he proved himself to be a man who could rise above the clamor of party prejudices and base his judg-ment on important questions arising before the committee on truth and justice, with an eye single and alone to the right between the opposing parties.

With marked ability and fairness he examined the evidence with a view of eliciting the truth. This accomplished, his action was prompt and decisive.

His service as a Member of this House began with my own, and during the first session he was prompt in his attendance, active in the discharge of his duties, and displayed the ability and courage worthy of the high position he occupied in the councils of the nation to which his people had honored him.

In his untimely death this House has lost one of its most useful Members, his district a Representative of whom the people were justly proud, and the nation a statesman who promised to become one of its most brilliant.

His political career was of short duration, but during that time he showed himself to be a man of the highest integrity and ability, a gentleman in the true sense of the word, who was destined to carve his name high up on the roll of honor.

We join with his family and those who knew him best, as well as the nation at large, in mourning his untimely death.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, we gather to do mournful reverence to our late colleague, ROCKWOOD HOAR.

His life was all too short to fill out the full measure of its promise. He was a man of whom it could be said that, had he lived, he would have trod the paths of greatness, whither his footsteps were surely and steadily leading him.

Born of an illustrious family, distinguished in the history of our Government, it may yet be said that he stood upon his own intellectual feet and carved out an independent career worthy of his great inheritance.

His nobility of character, his determined purpose to solve the great problems of human government, his intuition of common sense, and his untiring devotion to the duties of life, public and private, constitute a legacy that enriches us all.

In every relation of life he was the loving, courteous, and honorable gentleman.

Tried by all the best instincts of human nature, his heart rang true to his fellow-men.

I would that I could borrow from his own storehouse of choice English appropriate terms to express the sentiments that rise in my heart and press for utterance.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to measure his worth; that is better known than I can state. But, my friends, let it be our pleasure, as it is our duty, to hold up the life and services of Mr. Hoar as a noble and worthy example of what the human character is capable of accomplishing, so that it may be to the young men of this country the rich incentive to patriotism, honor, and that higher life which is the mark of every true American citizen.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, the life and character of our late colleague have been already so fully set forth that I can not hope to add anything of value, but my regard for him was so strong that I can not be silent on this occasion.

He came here to find a cordial prepossession in his favor, for he was elected to Congress just as his father finished his long and distinguished service, and I think all men cherished the hope that the magnificent public record of the father might be taken up and long continued by the son. We do not in this country yield honors to heredity. We are a new people, demo-cratic and informal, and part of our creed has been to give recognition only to the merit of the individual, not to descent. We have had no sympathy with the European habit of admiring most the youngest branches of the family tree, of honoring the latest scion of a house more than the originator, and regulating respect and giving precedence to men according to their distance from the founder of a family. On the con-trary, we "smile at the claims of long descent," and give most to the man who by his own effort and achievement has brought luster to his name. Certainly our creed seems most logical and reasonable. That member of a family who is first able to raise himself to eminence above his fellows is most likely to have the genius or the energy or the masterful will power which all men admire. And his descendants, enjoying the opulence and the respect which his exertions won for them, relieved from the need of struggle by his success, are likely to dissipate and lose in ease and idleness the virile qualities which they may have inherited from him. They will naturally make more agreeable carpet knights, they will shine better in courts, and please better a society which values only elegance and courtesy; but the iron will disappear from the blood, and dissipation and corruption are too likely to become their main distinction. Human nature is too indolent to retain long its vigor except under the spur of necessity.

'What shall I do that my son may make a figure in the world?" a nobleman once asked a lord chancellor of England. "I know of but one way, my lord," was the reply. "Give him parts and poverty." And so the tendency of a rich and distinguished family is to deteriorate and degenerate, and the farther from the fountain head the less likely to deserve respect.

Our public opinion goes to the other extreme from Europe. Rough power, mere success, we value most. We idealize the individual. Humble birth, unfavorable surroundings, an early struggle against oppressive obstacles, are the surest claims to general admiration and popularity. We are too busy and prac-tical to pay much heed to shrinking and delicate virtues or perhaps to sufficiently value culture and courtesy and refinement; we worship power and practical achievement. It is unusual with us to give honor to successive generations of a

And yet we are not without sentiment. I think we all rejoice when the scion of an honored but decayed house regains ancestral honors or wins new distinction. We vote with an added interest, not of reason, but of sentiment, for the man whose grandfather we have voted for before. We all exult with the broadening girdle of Scott's White Lady of Avenel. And so we all take more than common delight, and our judgment and our sentiment alike are captivated, when we see the talents and character of a great father renewed and perpetuated in a worthy son. Our late colleague gave promise of that attractive inheritance. He came to find among us partial friends. and in his short association with us he gave us reason to expect, as well as hope, that the duty to which three generations of eminent public service inspired and pledged him would be faithfully and honorably and adequately performed.

What would most impress you on first acquaintance was that he was a courteous, cultured gentleman. You might suspect that the ordinary process was going on and that the rugged strength of the founder of the family was being refined away, but a closer knowledge would assure you that though not obtrusive the firmness was still there; that though gentle he was resolute and could be obstinate; that the fiber of his brain was tough and unimpaired, and that there was in him, when roused, the stuff of which martyrs are made. Yet there was about him, and to me it was one of his most charming characteristics, a delicacy and refinement which you never forgot. The steel was of so fine a temper that the edge was keen, but there was a solid weight of metal behind it. While yielding and accommodating in small matters, yet you soon discovered that his will and his conscience were both alert and that he would be immovable when either prompted him to resistance. He was industrious and ambitious in the performance of his duties here, and gave evidence of the qualities to make him popular, influential, and most useful.

We have in Massachusetts two notable families where have been transmitted for generations from father to son not only talent, and character, and capacity for public service, but, more remarkable, the virile energy and vigor and enterprise which, in this competitive age, are indispensable for large success. Our late colleague was the last male representative in his generation of one of these. Such families are a rich possession for any Commonwealth. We have sentiment enough in practi-cal and busy Massachusetts to prize and honor them, and we trust that coming generations may renew their fame and increase our pride.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Speaker, because of the fact that several Members of the House who wish to be heard on this occasion are unavoidably absent, I ask unanimous consent that general leave to print be granted for a period of ten days, and ask that this leave also cover the memorial exercises about to be held for the late Representative Lester, as well as for those that are now concluded on the late Representative HOAR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McNary). The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that leave to print be granted for ten days. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and it was so ordered.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE RUFUS E. LESTER.

Mr. LIVÍNGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House at the conclusion of these services shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Overstreet of Georgia). The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The question was taken; and the resolutions were unani-

Mr. Overstreet].

Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is an exaggeration of the truth to say that of all the great and good and useful men who have lived and died in south Georgia since the civil war none stood higher in the esteem and affection of the people than did the Hon. Rufus E. Lester, my distinguished and lamented predecessor. For eighteen years he served continuously as a Member of this House without opposition for the Democratic nomination, save once, and on this occasion he was opposed by one of Bulloch County's favorite sons, one who had made a success and achieved a reputation in both branches of the general assembly of my State; but the love of the people for the veteran of 1861-1865 returned him to this House, where he remained up to the time of his tragic death.

It was not my good fortune to know him intimately. him best as my father's friend. They had been comrades in the civil war and had marched and fought for the same cause, and had suffered all the hardships and privations of a Confederate soldier's life. I have heard him often say: "Rufe Lester was as brave a soldier as ever shouldered a musket and a friend as true It was his unswerving loyalty and devotion to his friends that made Mr. Lester so formidable in a political contest. Not that this attribute was his only political asset, for he had many others, but it is a strong point that goes to make up the character of any man. And just here, Mr. Speaker, I desire to advert to a circumstance to show in what high and affectionate regard he was held by Members of this House. I did not have to wait for these solemn and impressive services to be told that our lamented friend occupied a position here that would be hard to fill. Hardly had I taken the oath of office as a Member of this body when gentlemen came to me from different parts of the House, and, without regard to party affiliations, expressed sentiments of sincere and profound sorrow at his death. not attempt on this occasion to speak of his record here. will leave for more eloquent lips than mine-for his colleagues from Georgia and other fellow-Members, who day after day had felt the warmth of his friendly greeting and the pressure of his strong, manly hand.

He lacked but little in living out his allotted time, threescore years and ten, for he was born in Burke County, Ga., December 12, 1837. After a course in the common schools of his native county he entered Mercer University, Georgia, from which he graduated in 1857. Two years afterwards he was admitted to the bar in Savannah, but in 1861, upon the first declaration of war, he entered the military service of the Confederate States, enlisting with the Twenty-fifth Georgia Regiment, and remained until the end. At the close of the great struggle, in which he took a conspicuous part, and during the gloomy days of reconstruction, when the rapacious carpetbaggers and unsavory scalawags swarmed in Georgia as did the locusts in Egypt of old, he stood in the State legislature shoulder to shoulder with other true and tried sons of Georgia in defense of southern civilization and white supremacy until the people of my native State succeeded in driving out the harpies that preved Than he there was not in all the State during the trying days of reconstruction a more potent factor in bringing order out of chaos, and when duty called he obeyed and never flinched. For eight consecutive years he served in the upper branch of the general assembly of Georgia with signal ability, and from the first he was conspicuous as a leader in the discus sion of all important legislation. Twice he was elected president of the senate, and he made a model presiding officer. It is said of him that "in the chair he was impartial, firm, courteous, quick, and clear in his decisions, and being thoroughly versed in parliamentary usage, was rarely reversed by a majority of senate on appeal from any ruling.

Mr. Speaker, in order that the country and the world might better know what manner of man he was I quote the words of ex-Governor Allen D. Candler, of Georgia, his schoolmate and lifelong friend. Said he: "I do not hesitate to say that with my intimate knowledge of the man and his character, acquired in those close and intimate associations in school, in the army, in the State senate, and in the National Congress, I have never known a truer man or one more loyal to his State, his country, and conviction of right, and I do not believe that all the gold of Ophir or the diamonds of Golconda could ever have tempted him to betray a friend, a trust, or an honest conviction." Surely such words as these come from a heart that speaks the truth.

In 1883 he was elected mayor of the city of Savannah, and he was reelected twice consecutively afterwards, resigning in 1889 upon being elected to the Fifty-first Congress of the United States. In the office of mayor he displayed executive ability of the highest order, and his administration will go down in history as one of the wisest and best the city ever had.

If there is one specific deed for which the people of my immediate section will hold him in grateful remembrance, it is the prompt, brave, and invaluable service rendered by him in 1873 to a large number of our citizens who were summarily arrested for violating certain provisions of what was known as "the enforcement act of the reconstruction laws." These men were arrested by United States marshals, ruthlessly taken to Savannah without an opportunity of giving bond or saying good-by to their families, and were about to be enchained in a felon's cell. When Colonel Lester heard of this the hot southern blood coursing through his veins in the meridian of his manhood began to boil with resentment and indignation, but the calmer judgment which he had prevailed, and he set at work to have the defendants released. With promptness he procured bail for all of the parties and sent them back to their homes, and in many cases where they had not the money to pay their railroad fare, he quickly and cheerfully advanced it to them. In the course of time he succeeded in having all the prosecutions dismissed, and all this he did without money and without price if the defendants were men of limited means.

All his public service has met the approbation of his countrymen, and our great and good friend has reared a monument in the hearts and affections of the people more lasting than marble and more enduring than bronze.

We often attempt to perpetuate the memory of our departed friends by erecting stately shafts which may portray them in grandeur to future generations, but all these in the course of time will yield to the silent forces of nature and dissolve and crumble into dust; even the little spot of ground that holds our sacred dead will some day be forgotten, not while we live, but generations to come after us will forget, and the marble slab that marks their final resting place will perish from the face of the earth and be swept into the sea of oblivion, but the impress of a great life upon the character of one's country "will survive the wreck of matter and the shock of time."

The remains of our departed friend rest in the city he loved so well, near where the waters of the Savannah empty into the sea. Such is my humble tribute to the memory of Georgia's gallant son.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Overstreet of Georgia). The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Bartlett].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of the memorial exercises in this House on the life of the late Senator Colquitt, Hon. Rufus E. Lester, then a Representative of Georgia, said:

"Mr. Speaker, we come at this hour to speak a word for our dead. No praise or censure can affect him in memory of whom we lift our voices to-day. The lesson of his life, like the lesson of the lives of all men, is for the living. Merely to have lived and to have died, to have moved through the short span of life, teaches nothing except that fact imprinted on the face of nature to be seen of all men, that there is a life and a death. But good deeds and a life that exemplifies virtuous qualities implanted by the Author of all Good in the human mind make that valuable tribute to humanity that gives a life its value to the world and gives good title to fame and immortality to which all men aspire. * * *

"Laying aside the implements of war, with nothing saved but honor, the citizen soldier resumed his civic duties with a perfect adjustment to the conditions. * * *

perfect adjustment to the conditions. * * * * "He served his people. They honored him living and mourn him dead. In the Pantheon devoted to illustrious memories we place his name."

This was the last speech he made in this House. Physical infirmity prevented him from again addressing the House.

Thus he spoke of a Georgian who had been a Confederate soldier, governor of the State, and Senator of the United States. Well might I quote these words of our dead colleague on this occasion, now, and say no more, because they so well typify his own life. But it is proper that more shall be spoken by me.

On the 16th day of June last, as the summer day ended and twilight shadows gathered around, there passed from earth to immortality the soul of Rufus Ezekiel Lester. Ripe in years, having nearly reached the allotted span of three score years and ten, there ended the life of as generous, noble, chivalrous, and courageous a man as it was ever my fortune to know.

He had served his county, his State, and his people in many positions, and in all was faithful, true, and devoted. Born and reared in that civilization which was peculiar to the South, he to his dying day held fast to all those ennobling qualities which have peculiarly marked the men of that generation. Born in Burke County, Ga., on the 12th of December, 1837, his early education was obtained at the country schools of that county. He then entered Mercer University, then located at Penfield, Ga., and graduated from that university in 1857, at the age of 20 years, receiving the highest honor given to his class. Entering the law office of Wilson & Norwood, at Savannah, Ga., he began the study of law under this firm of distinguished Georgia lawyers. He was admitted to the bar in 1859, becoming a junior member of the firm of Wilson & Norwood. He at once began the practice of his chosen profession, which he continually followed, except during the four years of the civil war, from 1861 to 1865, and until after he entered Congress in 1889, after which he retired from active practice, but continued to be a member of the firm of Lester & Ravenel to the day of his death. He was also a member of the firm of Fleming & Lester, the senior member being a distinguished Georgia judge. The firm of Lester & Ravenel was formed in 1880, and, as stated, continued until the time of Mr. Lester's death.

When Georgia seceded and war was declared, and the Southern States formed the Southern Confederacy, young Lester immediately entered the Confederate army, enlisting in the Twenty-fifth Georgia Regiment of Volunteer Infantry, commanded by Col. C. C. Wilson, and soon thereafter was promoted to the position of first lieutenant. During the first two years of the war he served under General Mercer and General Walker, in the coast defenses on the Atlantic seaboard, having been promoted to the office of adjutant of the regiment. When General Walker's brigade was transferred to the western army of the Confederate States, in 1863, Colonel Lester became a member of that army and participated with it in the operations around Vicksburg and the battles around Jackson. During this campaign he was again promoted to the office of acting assistant adjutant of the brigade commanded by General Wilson, who had succeeded General Walker. He followed the fortunes of this army and was actively engaged with it in the battle of It was at this battle that he displayed that heroism and bravery which, from his earliest life to his last moment, so characterized and distinguished him. There it was that, though twice wounded and twice his horse was shot from under him, he continued in the fight until the end, and was mentioned in the dispatches of the commanding general for distinguished gallantry. Though disabled from the wounds he re-ceived, he did not leave the service, but continued until the end came, reporting again for duty as soon as he was sufficiently recovered. Being too weak to return again to the field and take active part in the operations in the field, he was appointed inspector-general under General Mackall, at Macon, Ga., where he remained on duty until the surrender of General Lee at Appomattox. After the surrender at Appomattox he returned to Savannah and resumed the practice of his profession. To use his own language on another occasion:

But darker days than those of war came upon Georgia and the South, and during that period he was most active in standing with his people and lending his aid, energies, and talents to relieving them from oppression and restoring them to better government. In 1868 he was elected to the State senate from the Savannah district while still a young man and without political experience or strong political friends. But the powers that controlled Georgia in that dark period of her history did not want such a true and tried son of Georgia to legislate for her, and he was unseated and his seat given to Aaron A. Bradley, a negro lawyer of Boston, at that time temporarily residing in Though deprived of his seat, he still remained at Savannah. the capital to represent his people and their interests. These were the dark days of military rule and carpetbag ascendency in Georgia, and this was doubtless the severest struggle of his political life and put to the fullest test his manhood, energy, honesty, and vigilance. It was then that he exhibited that same unswerving moral courage that he exhibited on the battlefield and which always characterized him until the day of his death. These services rendered by him as a tribune of the people, though he was deprived of his seat, were duly appreciated by his constituency in Savannah. He had not much of the world's means, yet he had borne all the expense of his stay at the State capital during this period. His constituents of fered him compensation, but this he declined. At the next election, in 1870, he was elected to the State senate, and for successive terms was reelected and served for nine years without opposition. During the last three years of his service he was president of the Georgia senate. At the expiration of that term he declined reelection to the senate. In his office of senator and as president of the senate he discharged his duties manfully, impartially, and courageously; at all times courteous and urbane, yet also at all times firm and unbending in undertaking to carry out the right as he saw and understood it.

It was during the period of his legislative service that the legislature of Georgia, like those of other Southern States, was engaged in lavishly spending the money of the people, collected by taxation from them at that time when they were struggling with poverty and depression, when the property had but little value, and when the revenues from it would scarcely pay the exactions of the taxgatherer. Bonds were being issued ostensibly for the purpose of building railroads, and exploiters of every kind flocked to the State capitol in order to plunder the treasury. To the issuance of these bonds by the Bullock administration for the railroads Colonel Lester entered his opposition and manfully resisted it. While the act authorizing their issue was passed, at least $10,000,000 of them were never intended to be used, and were never issued legally, but were issued fraudulently. When the people of Georgia came to their own again the course of the young senator was vindicated, and the governor who had issued these fraudulent bonds took flight, and after a full investigation these bonds were declared to be void and not binding upon the State, and all recognized the fraud perpetrated by the legislature and the executive which Mr. Lester sought to prevent. After leaving the State senate, and declining reelection, he began again the practice of his profession and took front rank at the Savannah bar, a bar which at that time was not surpassed in any city for ability, character, and worth. Within a year, however, the people of Savannah called him to the mayoralty of the city, and during six years he served in that capacity.

The necessities of the city were such that economy and reduction of expense were demanded. This he promptly aided in doing, and in order to set the city an example of reducing expenses he commenced by reducing his own salary. For six years he served that city, and gave them an administration which was honest, faithful, clean, and above suspicion. He found time during this service to practice his profession, and was pursuing it with remarkable success and stood at the forefront of his bar when, in 1888, after a long and continual struggle in the convention to nominate a candidate for Congress, he was nominated by both factions, when he was not a candidate and was not seeking the office. From March 4, 1889, until June 16, 1906, he was successively returned at every succeeding election by the constituency of the first district of Georgia, although his increasing years and physical affliction greatly weighed upon him. Had he survived until the end of his term, he would have been a Member of this House for eighteen years. He had intended voluntarily to retire, It was impossible to defeat him in his district, and but one effort was made to do so during the entire period of his service. love and devotion of his people to him were beautiful. He had always served them faithfully and courageously and devotedly, and they were willing that he might represent them as long as

Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to go into details as to his service in this body. He had not long been a Member before men on both sides were attracted to him by his manliness, by his courtesy, and by his attention to his duty, and I apprehend I speak but the simple truth when I say that no man has served here during the time that he did who had so many friends—warm, true, and loyal—on both sides as did our lamented colleague. His duties in the matter of legislation were principally shown in the work upon the river and harbor bill, the city which he represented being peculiarly interested in that character of legislation, and to his untiring and faithful work, to his influence upon his colleagues on that committee and upon the House is due the fact that to-day the work there done by the Government has made that city the great chief export city of the Southeast.

I will, however, call attention to one small thing, because it is the small things, at last, in life that show how we appreciate a man. Just a few days before the terrible accident, which ended in his death, he had succeeded in passing through this House a bill in which his heart was deeply interested. True, it was merely a private bill, one from the Committee on Military Affairs, one which sought to restore to the rolls of the Army a young Army officer, who was the son of Gen. William H. T. Walker, whom Colonel Lester had followed, until his death, in battle. It was against the rules of this House to call up such a bill or to ask unanimous consent for its consideration. They were assigned to particular days, which meant they were never to be called again. Yet I can recall the incident very vividly when this friend of ours of whom we speak to-day rose in his seat and asked permission of the House that this bill might be considered out of its order against the rules of the House. Every man present consented to it. It was a tribute to the man which we seldom see in this House or elsewhere.

One of the characteristics that marked the life of our deceased colleague was his courage—not the courage which any man may exhibit to whom physical fear is unknown, but that courage which fears no danger when the right is involved; that courage which the ancient Roman called "virtus," and which he regarded amongst the highest virtues, and from which our language derives its word "virtue;" that courage which renders the tender and gentle the bravest and the loving the daring; for our departed friend possessed to a remarkable degree that courage which springs from sincere convictions, and this made him fearless and outspoken, and he had the ability to defend these convictions. In their defense he dealt heavy blows, but always in an open field and at fair play.

Added to his courage and manliness were those traits which distinctly marked the old-time southern gentleman. He cherished no animosities; he was courteous and gentle-as gentle as a woman—and at all times the same true and loyal friend and devoted to his duties. Whatever the position he filled, whether as the soldier in the ranks, the officer in command, he was the same brave, conscientious, and faithful devotee to Whether as citizen, legislator for the State, mayor, Representative in Congress, the one thing that controlled his action was to discharge the duties these various positions imposed; and right well did he perform them, with a conviction and a courage that few have equaled and none surpassed. In the defense of his convictions he was ever ready to stand up and face all opposition and every danger.

Possessing so many rare and generous attributes it is not strange that he should have found warm friends amongst those with whom he associated here and everywhere, and that some of those warmest friends should have been his political opponents. Everybody loves a truly noble and brave man, and Mr. LESTER was both noble and brave. It has been well said-

He who is truly courageous fears but two things—God and himself; he fears lest his own rash passions or mistaken views may lead him to do what is wrong; but once assured that he is right he cares not for one man or many men, he cares not for their ridicule or contempt. That which you think is right, do; that which you think is wrong, avoid, without regard to the smiles or frowns of any or all others. Only so can you prove yourself courageous.

No braver man, no more courageous man than Rufus E. Lester ever came within my knowledge and none ever lived, in my opinion, and though endowed with many other noble and attractive traits and virtues his chief characteristic was his courage. He was resolute, fearless, and independent. He never Crooked the pregnant hinges of the knee Where thrift might follow fawning.

He yielded to neither blandishments on the one hand nor to intimidation on the other, but stood erect, manly, brave, unmoved.

But brave as he was, courageous as he was, neither his courage nor his bravery could overcome the great enemy of mankind. His work on earth is done, and he is at rest.

Peace to his memory.

And from heaven of heavens above God speaketh with bateless breath— "My angel of perfect love Is the angel men call Death!"

But his name and fame will survive with those other heroes, eloquent and distinguished men who have made Georgia's history illustrious, and whose fame does not belong to Georgia or the South alone, but to the whole country—to the Republic—a reunited, indivisible, indestructible Republic—a Republic that shall never die.

We can not lift the veil that shuts from the public view the private grief in the family circle. We will, however, be permitted to say that our hearts go out in sympathetic love to-day to the lonely woman who was his helpmeet all the days of his manhood life, hers the desolation of an irreparable loss, but with the consolation that his life, his character, his worth, his deeds, will always be cherished by all who knew him. Peace be with her

Mr. Speaker, we carried his body to the city where he lived, and the whole city, with closed stores, closed shops, assembled to pay reverence to him and to weep at his grave. We buried him in Bonaventure Cemetery, beside the grave of his daughter. and Masons, Knights of Pythias, Odd Fellows, lawyers, citizens, both white and colored, were present to show to us, to the committee, and to the world how they loved him and how they mourned his loss. I will call attention to one simple fact at the grave and to the ceremonies which were there performed. After the solemn ceremonies of the Masons and other orders had been performed at the grave, the coffin was lowered into the grave, one portion of it wrapped with the Stars and Stripes and the other with the battle flag of the Confederacy.

Beneath the moss-draped limbs of Bonaventure's funereal oaks the last sad rite of the church had been uttered. Knights.

Odd Fellows, and Masons had successively paid their tribute of respect. A moment's hush fell on the vast concourse and in the whispering winds overhead one who loved him and loved his friends heard far voices calling to him from many quarters to speak for them a fond farewell. With faltering speech this is what he said:

Before this solemn ceremony is finally concluded let me say a few words for those who could not be present this afternoon, for the hundreds and thousands of his absent friends throughout the district.

I have met them in the town, at the crossroads, around the hearthstone, and have seen their eyes kindle, their countenances light up at the mere mention of the name of RUFUS E. LESTER.

For all of them, for each of them, I would say, as I stand by this open grave:

open grave: RUFUS E. LESTER, brave as a lion, true as steel, kind, generous, sympathetic, as yonder sinking sun sinks to rest in the glowing west, so thy body draped in the Stars and Bars goes down to sleep in its grave of glory, and to it we bid a sad good night.

But the light of thy bright intellect shall suffer no eclipse, the flame that burned on the altar of thy loyal heart shall be kindled again on high, and some happy day, to thy glorified spirit, we shall say "good morrow, dear friend, God bless you and keep you, now and forever."

Mr. Speaker, it is appointed unto man once to die. Both nature and the revealed word proclaim this sad and unalterable truth. The decree is universal and irrevocable. Neither station, nor position, nor acquirements of the highest order will exempt us. Wordly things can furnish us no aid; human love can not succor us.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of pow'r,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike the inevitable hour.
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Frequently and constantly are we here reminded of this truth.

The angel of death has constantly hovered over the National Capitol during the Fifty-ninth Congress, the darts of the insatiate archer fly swift and thick into the ranks of the national representatives—thrice has the Senate been called upon to mourn the loss of one of its members-and each recurring Sabbath finds the House devoting itself to memorial services for some colleague who has fallen a victim to the fell destroyer who has entered it and stricken our comrades from the roll.

Well may we pause to reflect how transitory, how unsatisfactory are the prizes for which we so arduously and ardently strive and struggle; ambition's rewards are at last empty. Power, reward, fame, all are valueless when we stand face to face with the great enemy of mankind, and our tired, unsatisfied spirit turns from all these to seek something more enduring.

What is life—a bubble, floating on that silent, rapid stream, Few, too few its progress noting, till it burst and ends the dream.

But we have the belief in the immortality of the soul, which takes away from death its terrors. It is this which makes us believe and rest secure in the assurance that the grave is not the end of man. We shall not go hence and be no more seen; and we are comforted with the reflection, which our revealed religious teachings assure, that death is "but the middle point between two lives—between this and another." Our faith looks beyond the grave and inspires us with the hope and confidence of immortality.

Our own intuitive consciousness and the almost universal belief of mankind are in accord with the Scriptures in asserting that the soul of man shall survive the tomb. The poet has given expression to this consciousness of immortality in the following lines:

A voice within us speaks that startling word,
"Man, thou shalt never die!" Celestial voices
Hymn it into our souls: according harps
By angel fingers touched, when the mild stars
Of morning sang together, sound forth still
The song of our great immortality;
Thick clustering orbs, and this our fair domain,
The tall dark mountains and the deep-toned seas,
Join in this universal song.
Oh! listen ye our spirits! drink it in
From all the air! "Tis in the gentle moonlight;
"Tis floating midst day's setting glories: night,
Wrapped in her sable robe, with silent step
Comes to our bed, and breathes it in our ears;
Night and the dawn, bright day and thoughtful eve,
All time, all bounds, the limitless expanse,
As one vast mystic instrument, are touched
By an unseen living hand, and conscious chords
Quiver with joy in this great jubilee.
The dying hear it; and as sounds of earth
Grow dull and distant, wake the passing souls
To mingle in this heavenly harmony.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it is a deplorable fact that a man's worthiest deeds rarely receive deserved recognition In the busy whirl the passing throng is all too while he lives. indifferent to the merits of contemporaries. It is not until after the final leave-taking that the world realizes how great its loss when a good man dies. It is meet to-day that we should review the life of our deceased colleague, Mr. Lester. In his allotted span of a little less than seventy years he was associated with and bore a prominent part in many very important events. He was one of that multitude of young men, North and South, who turned aside from professional duties to the titanic struggle of the greatest of civil wars. The all-absorbing demands of the conflict caused them to withdraw from chosen occupations and from cherished hopes to take part in a great war which must decide great principles.

He entered the Confederate army. There was a time when there was a marked repulsion between the Union and the Confederate soldier, but time, which gives clearer judgment and greater charity, will teach us to forget all the animosities of the past. Time buries hatreds. It allays asperities and forever puts an end to distrust and ill will. We shall recognize, and, indeed, we now recognize, that heroic devotion to a cause can not arise from perverseness, but only from conscience and from courage, and thus we can bare our heads and speak with honor and with praise of the living and the dead who fought on either side, and at the final roll call it is not an extravagant stretch of imagination to believe that the bells of heaven will ring while the blue and the gray march side by side to the great white throne. Wounded in the struggle and defeated, he returned with broken hopes to civil life, but his merits soon gained recognition, and after a brief interval he was elected a member of the Georgia senate, where he served for ten years in a very trying period, during three years of which he acted as presiding officer. Those of us who have been longest here will remember that during his service in this body on occasions he presided in Committee of the Whole House, in all of which he showed his ability and fairness as a presiding officer. One of his decisions especially has been accepted as a precedent in the settlement of very important principles of parliamentary law. In a brief interval after the close of his service in the senate of his State he was elected mayor of Savannah, and in those difficult problems which pertain to municipal government he manifested the essential qualities of fidelity to his trust and executive ability and the possession of that progressive spirit which should prevail in a growing city. There were no aspersions on his name while mayor of Savannah; there was no scandal arising from the awarding of contracts. There was no one who could criticise the honesty or fearlessness of his course. One of the most striking instances of his career as mayor was the saving of an intended victim from lynching.

With a soldier's courage and prompt decision he pointed out a dead line, and with a soldier's word of command ordered that none should pass it, thus saving a human life, so that it might be dealt with in the ordinary course of justice. His career in Congress is known to many of us. It lacked but little of eighteen years. I regret to say that during the eleven years in which I knew him best he was a victim of fell disease and suffered from those limitations which pertain to ill health. Physical pain and weakness deprived him of that energy and alertness which had belonged to him in earlier days, and in his mental activities there were those caves of gloom that shut out the brightest rays of hope. The general consciousness may be expressed in the words addressed to the rebel angel: "Fallen Cherub, to be weak is to be miserable." Few realize the diminished energy and the disappointed hopes which ill health im-

Yet in it all there was a patience, a fortitude, a devotion to duty on his part, which not only won for him admiration, but rendered his service as a legislator a most useful one. I remember having several times said to him while the committee of which we were members was engaged in inspection trips, This will be an arduous day, Mr. LESTER; you must not feel compelled to go out with the rest of us; would you not prefer to rest?" But he was always on hand. A desire to perform the work in which he was engaged gave him the same promptness and regularity as that which was displayed by younger and healthier men.

Accordingly, while he did not have that ruggedness which belongs to perfect health, he displayed in the consultations of the committee room a poise and an intelligent comprehension of the commercial needs of the country, which gave to his judgment the very highest value, so that in the work of the bore an important part, notwithstanding his committee he infirmity and his disadvantages. He deserves the praise due to a man who was always patriotic, always careful, and always wise in the consideration of great public questions,

After all, it is not so much as a soldier or as a legislator, but as a man that we remember those with whom we have associations, and in this particular Mr. Lester merited our special com-He was an affectionate husband. He at all times enjoyed his home, the surroundings of the domestic circle, and found there his chiefest delight, and we tender, one and all, to his bereaved widow and to his grandchildren our tribute of sympathy and sorrow not only because they have lost one who bore so important a part in public affairs, but much more because of the irreparable loss to their home life.

Those cruel words employed in describing nature-

So careful of the type she seems, So careless of the single life, indicate how transient is the life of each individual.

One by one we shall be taken away from this Chamber, and our work must be done by others who succeed us. But is it not true that in Mr. Lester, and of those who with him served on both sides in the great conflict, that there is a type which will not be reproduced? Do we not owe to them a special homage for their courage, their devotion to duty? While the life of a public man in its influence is more or less ephemeral, because he is soon almost forgotten, yet in the life of our deceased friend there will be an inspiration and a source of hope to all those who knew him, and who, like him, seek to meet the responsibilities of life in the pathway of duty and of truth.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, the poet has sung in melancholy strains:

They are slipping away, the sweet, swift years, Like a leaf on the current cast. With never a break in their rapid flow Into the beautiful past.

This is a sad truth, and yet it does not tell the whole story, for going with them and departing as they depart are the millions of earth into that past which receives the ever-retreating years.

How often are we reminded of this melancholy fact here and elsewhere? Each year's history records the death of many acquaintances, perchance many close personal friends. Every day a flower is plucked from the garden of time; a breach made in some happy home or friendly circle; a jewel stolen from some treasure of love. Each hour—yea, each moment—some reaper in the summer field of life is himself taken by the reaper Death, who in his gleanings is no respecter of persons or station.

It may be the youth, hopeful and generous, with the morning sun full in his face, or the man, honorable and true, who has reached the summit from which he may look down the heights he has climbed or the declivity he must descend; or it may be the weary toiler of many summers, rich with labor's returns and crowned with many honors-for none are spared, but all are sought and gathered by the grim Reaper.

At our homes, in the communities in which we live and move, we so frequently hear the sound of mourning, so often are required to stand at the grave of some friend or acquaintance while the sod has fallen over the "cold and pulseless clay." And here, too, in these historic halls has death found many of its shining marks. How often in the past decade, indeed in the past year, have we paused in the daily proceedings of this body to note the fall of an associate here and pay the last tribute of love and respect to some departed friend and colleague who has been cut down by the ruthless, untiring hand of death.

Of one among the last of these it is now my sad duty to speak. On the 16th day of June last, within two weeks of the close of that history-making session of the Fifty-ninth Congress which ended with that month, Rufus E. Lester, of Georgia, was taken from the field of his labors here to the great beyond.

He was born in the State of Georgia in 1837, during a period of American history and in a section of the South which has given the country some of its brightest intellects and grandest characters. His biography is embraced within ten lines of the Congressional Directory, and yet in these ten lines is the epitome of a life work of which any might be proud:

Graduated at Mercer University, Georgia, in 1857-

admitted to the bar in Savannah and commenced the practice of law in 1859; entered the military service of the Confederate States in 1861; remained in the service until the end of the war; resumed the practice of law at the close of the war; was State senator from the first senatorial district of Georgia 1870–1879; and president of the senate during the last three years of service; was mayor of Savannah from January, 1883, to January, 1889 was elected to the Fifty-first, Fifty-second, Fifty-third, Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, Fifty-seventh, and Fifty-eighth, and reelected to the Fifty-ninth Congress.

Modestly expressed, and yet how much of history and of startling events, of duty done as he saw it, of privation and hardships, of gallant deeds and blood-stained battlefields, do these brief words contain. Elaborated as it might have been, it would have comprised an account of early struggles for an education and for that distinction which soon came in his chosen profession. It, too, would have recounted the distinguished and honorable part he took in one of the greatest military conflicts ever recorded in the annals of the past, in which the chivalry of the South met the valor of the North in bloody battle until the southern cause went down at Appo-mattox; but, nevertheless, a conflict, inevitable, perhaps, which has left the country grander and stronger and better.

Then, too, it would have contained an account of a career no less illustrious in civil life. Few have shown as bright or attained higher distinction than be in the legislative halls of his State. Entering there in the dark days of reconstruction, he rendered his State a most valuable service in assisting to raise her from the depths into which she had been thrown by unfriendly hands and in placing her feet on that highway of progress which she has since followed, until to-day she is abreast of the most flourishing Commonwealths in the Union.

Leaving this useful field of labor, his biographer could turn with equal satisfaction to his career as mayor of the city of Savannah, a position held by him with honor and distinction for six years—from 1883 to 1889—during which time Savannah made rapid strides in her wonderful career of progress. In this capacity no one ever served the city in which he had his home for a half century with greater distinction or more to the satisfaction of the people of that progressive southern city.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is here perhaps that his biographer could find some of the best material for the life history of Rufus E. Lester. His long service in Congress, extending over nearly two decades, shows the esteem in which he was held by his fellow-citizens, while the results of his efforts in their behalf justified the high value placed by them upon his services. Few have been able to do so much; none perhaps have accomplished more for his State than did he during his stay in Congress. Many matters of legislation attest the truth of this assertion; but if his fame as a legislator in State and nation had naught else upon which to stand it could rest securely upon the work he did for the country, his State, and his home city in the improvement of the harbor at Savannah. Greatly inadequate when he entered Congress for the commerce centering there, he, through his untiring energy, had improvements initiated and carried out which have made that harbor one of the finest of the South Atlantic seaboard, and thus conferred a lasting benefit upon the commercial interests not only of that locality, but of the whole country as well.

But his labors did not end here. He never tired in his efforts to benefit his constituents, and the whole State received the benefits of his fidelity to Georgia and her people. Indeed, if I were to undertake to name his leading characteristic, I would say it was absolute fidelity to the interests he represented; only another way of saying he did his duty.

He was among the earliest acquaintances I met when I came

He was among the earliest acquaintances I met when I came here as a Member of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and aside from services he so often and so kindly rendered me I was greatly impressed even then with his loyalty to his people. That magnificent public building which Savannah possesses, together with the harbor and other interests there, were then receiving his attention, and from that time until his death he never for a moment lost sight of them. Though in failing health during the last years of his life, scarcely a day passed that found his seat unoccupied by him on this floor.

The last conversation I ever had with him was at his desk a few hours before he met with the accident that, in his enfeebled condition, caused his death. A movement was then on foot to establish a subtreasury somewhere in the southeastern part of the country, and his desire was that I should indorse the claims of Savannah for this subtreasury. I promised him to do this and kept the promise, but never saw him again in life. The next day, or night, the summons came, and Georgia lost one of its best friends and brightest ornaments; but in going hence he left behind him monuments to his fidelity and energy which will last for generations to come.

But his civic and military careers did not fill up his entire life, nor were his achievements in public life the only monuments he builded to his memory, for in his private life he was beloved wherever known as he was admired in his public career. He was a devoted husband, an affectionate father, spending every moment he could spare from his public duties or business demands with his family. Kindly in his disposition, generous in his feelings, sincere and unswerving in his friendship, just in his dealings with his fellow-man, he had few, if any, enemies, and left his memory enshrined in the heart alike of constituent, acquaintance, and friend.

Of his professional career I will leave others more familiar with that part of his life to speak, but it may not be amiss for me to say that he was as successful in the practice of his profession as he was in any other undertaking during his long and active career. He brought the same talents, the same energy, the same good judgment and devotion to duty to bear upon the practice of his profession that he did to public duties, whilst his honesty and his fairness with his clients, his professional brethren, and the court brought him the respect and the confidence of all.

It is of men such as he one loves to speak. Richly endowed with those qualities of mind and heart which ennoble the race to which he belonged, ever pursuing the path of duty until success full and complete crowned his efforts, his life should be an inspiration to the young and the old alike wherever its history is written and read. From it comes an influence for good which will be felt far beyond the district in which he lived and which will long survive the grave in which he lies buried.

I was one of those, Mr. Speaker, whose sad duty it was to accompany his remains to their last resting place, and when I saw the vast throng, young and old, rich and poor, merchant and laborer, professional man and layman, who attended the funeral at the church and followed the cortège to the grave, each paying solemn but loving tribute to his memory, I saw again revealed that wonderful hold he had upon the people among whom his life had been spent and for whom his work had been done. We bore his body to Bonaventure, that beautiful resting place of Savannah's dead, and there, close to the city he loved so well and near that historic stream for whose commerce he had done so much, we laid him to rest beneath the soil of his native State, there to sleep while comrade and friend covered his bier with loving flowers and draped his grave with the battle-scarred flag which he followed through years of bloody strife. It was a scene long to be remembered, and just as the early summer sun was sinking in the west we left him, with the soft southern winds singing his requiem, to sleep until the last trump shall sound. Yes; only to sleep, for he is not dead

He sleeps, but in that sleep beneath the sod.

No dreams shall come, those dreams that banish sleep;
No watchers there, naught save the eyes of God,
To watch his slumber long and still and deep.
Then mourn him not as dead; he can not die,
And mourn him not as sleeping in that day,
He wakes, he lives, not far in yonder sky,
But near us, though unseen, he walks to-day.

Mr. Speaker, it is true that death is a mystery, but "life is" also "a mystery as deep as death can ever be," and it can not be that all there is of this mystery of life is encompassed in the short stretch between the cradle and the grave. Certainly man, with his hopes and aspirations, with his rich endowments of mind and heart, such as our friend had, is not "like the beasts that perish."

We may not fathom this mystery of life, nor yet that of death, but we do believe that beyond the grave there is a brighter world, where friends and the beloved ones on earth may meet again. "If a man die, shall he live again?" has been asked by prophet and priest, by king and people, while down the ages the answer has come from divine lips: "After death there is life; after the grave the resurrection morn."

"Behold! I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, Rufus Ezekiel Lester was born on the 12th day of December, 1837; graduated at Mercer University in 1857; admitted to the bar and began the practice of law at Savannah, Ga. He entered the Confederate army in 1861, serving to the close of the civil war. He served his State from the first senatorial district from 1870 to 1879, and for two years of that time was president of the senate. He served the city of Savannah as mayor for six years. He was elected to the Fifty-first Congress and continuously up to and including the Fifty-ninth Congress. In all this service, both to the State of Georgia, the Confederate States, and the United States, there is not left a blot or stain upon his fair name. He was sociable, strictly honest, kind, and obliging. In all his intercourse with his fellow-men, both in private and public life, he was not obtrusive, exacting, or censorious. He was not a kicker-a characteristic which renders some of our public men disagreeable and com-paratively useless. He was not a seeker of favors at the expense of others. He was not unreasonably selfish. It was always a pleasure to meet him for an hour of greeting and pastime. There was nothing repulsive in his appearance or manners. His days of service in the House were trying and embarrassing on account of his afflictions, yet he bore it all in the discharge of his duties without a murmur. Peace to his ashes. Respect and reverence to his memory.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bear testimony to the excellent character of Colonel Lester as a man and a public servant. I shall leave others, more familiar with that part of the subject, to speak of his distinguished career as a soldier—four years, in which he struggled as a member of an immortal band against unnumbered odds of men and means, and lost that fight in defense, as he believed, of the eternal principles of local self-government and the integrity of constitutional safeguards which had never before been disputed but warmly advocated by his adversaries, and which, as passion and prejudice fade away before advancing enlightenment and patriotism, are one by one again being recognized, invoked, and utilized, even, by those who physically prevailed in that contest.

As he was several years my senior and we resided on opposite sides of the State, I knew nothing of him until I reached man's estate and entered upon the practice of law more than thirty He was then, and had been for many years, prominent and active in Georgia politics and legislation, honored and loved throughout the State as an upright, honest, and lovable man, able and faithful lawyer, and legislator both efficient and profound. Long subsequent service as mayor of his beautiful and beloved home city by the sea demonstrated his great executive ability. It was, however, only as a Member of Congress that I came to know him well and to love him. The first week of my official service he came to me, a new Member, so ready to receive and appreciate such kindness, and offered assistance and encouragement, and never to his dying day ceased to help and cooperate in the most kindly and effective manner in anything I wished to accomplish, his last journey in life being taken with his committee, at my instance, to the district I represent to investigate and promote the interests of my constituents. I feel that I have lost a friend, indeed. Others may speak more fully of his domestic life, but as I often enjoyed the society of him and his elegant wife, who helped him so much to be good and useful, I greatly admired his tenderness and devotion as a husband and father.

As a legislator, his course and conduct were most admirable. He was void of petty jealousy and envy of his fellows. He was exquisitely considerate of his colleagues. He was calm, dignified, and polite as Chesterfield, but persistent and indefatigable in his industry, always intelligent and well ordered. He rarely failed in what he undertook, for he undertook nothing but what was right and never failed to do what was necessary to accomplish it when once undertaken. He was willing to do what he could to advance and rise as his merit justified, but he realized that there were others, and felt willing for them to rise and advance also. He would scorn a personal advantage secured at the expense of a comrade's interest, dignity, or feelings. He worked not alone for himself and the district which elected him. He worked for all his colleagues and for the whole country. Being too great for selfishness, he was too broad for sectionalism; too noble for unfair self-aggrandizement, he was magnanimous enough to rise high above partisanship in discharge of public duty. No man in Congress was ever more beloved by his colleagues, and his attributes inspired his fellows with such confidence that he was able as a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to secure longdelayed attention to the rivers and harbors of the Southeast, and prove himself more useful to his part of the Union than any Member who has come to Congress from that region in fifty years

It has been a benediction to know and love such a man, and I feel and assert the right, while uniting in heartfelt sympathy with his stricken family, to claim a personal share in his loss Fulsome eulogy would not befit a discourse about the life and character of such a man. He scorned unjust laudation as much as he detested any other form of folly and wrong. His life was nothing but plain, intelligent truth, honesty, and industry. He despised sham, pretense, littleness, and meanness, and loved and lived justice, fairness, and uprightness. Blessed are we if the mold of his virtues be not lost to this earth. Happy the land, if the Lord raise up many like unto him to illustrate the beauties of true character in private, social, official, and political life, for the admiration and imitation of our people, to the end that righteousness and good government may dominate this goodly land to perpetuate our benign institutions forever.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Rufus Ezekiel Les-TER is dead, and we are met here this Sabbath evening, as his colleagues and friends, to pay our sad tribute to his memory. In whatever form death comes to the sons of men, whether he lays his icy hand on happy childhood, bright youth, active manhood, or calm old age, he comes a most unwelcome guest. If he comes, as he did in this case, swift and unheralded, to work his will, the soul, powerless, bears his grim tyranny.

It was my good fortune to grow singularly intimate with this gallant gentleman, so much older than myself. I served for several years with him on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and during the last long session of Congress I lived at the same hotel with him. I frequently noted the intense devotion he bore to his two little grandchildren. It is doubtless true that his devotion to these dear children was indirectly the cause of his death. There is no doubt that in the search for them in the twilight of the evening of the 15th of June last, without thought of death or danger and not knowing the frailty of his footing, he walked out on the skylight and fell to

He was born in Burke County, Ga., December 12, 1837. attended the country schools common to those times and that section and graduated from Mercer University at the age of 20. He was admitted to the bar in Savannah in 1859, and immediately began the practice of his profession. At the beginning of the great civil war he enlisted as a Confederate soldier in the Twenty-fifth Georgia Regiment of Volunteer Infantry, and fought through the whole war until its close. Shortly thereafter, having returned to the city of Savannah and resumed the practice of his profession, he was elected in 1868 to the senate of his State, and served continuously in that distinguished body for eleven years.

The last three years of his service he was president of that The last three years of his service he was president of that senate. He refused to stand for reelection, and shortly thereafter was elected mayor of the city of Savannah. He served continuously in that position six years and until his election, in 1888, to Congress. He was continuously reelected and served in this House up to the time of his death. Such, speaking broadly, was the career of our friend and colleague, one covering almost half a century of distinguished service to his country, as a soldier, as a lawyer, and as a legislator.

As a soldier he was the bravest of the brave. He knew no call but duty, and he dreaded nothing but God and conscience. He rapidly rose in rank and participated in many important engagements. On the bloody field of Chickamauga he was twice wounded, had two horses killed under him, and still he fought gagements on, and the surrender found him on the soil of his native State, Georgia, at Macon, conquered but dauntless as of yore. He returned at the close of the war to his city, where he had been licensed to practice law, to resume his practice and turned his back upon these bloody years of his record as a soldier.

In the language of a great orator:

I have but one sentiment for soldiers, living or dead, and that is, cheers for the living and tears for the dead.

In his chosen profession of the law he also rose rapidly, taking high rank in his section as one of the leaders of the bar of southwest Georgia. He brought to the discharge of the duties of that profession that high sense of honor so essential to the success of a real lawyer. Industrious, of tireless energy, of spotless character, with a mind of splendid analytical qualities, it is not surprising that he achieved high success in this most noble profession. As a legislator he also took high rank. senate of his own State he rapidly rose in power and influence, and became the presiding officer of that body, and was recog nized widely as one of the finest and fairest that the State had ever possessed. As a legislator in Congress he also attained high rank. There was but little of the play to the galleries about this gallant gentleman. There was, however, much thought, much earnestness, much honest endeavor to do the best for his city, his district, his section, and the whole country that the circumstances would permit. He achieved as a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, not only for his immediate town and his district, but for the whole State of Georgia many splendid things, of which I shall not take time to speak, for they are there as monuments to his worth, his service, and his loyalty to the people among whom he lived and died, and toward whom he bore such deathless love.

He is gone. He leaves behind him a splendid southern woman, his wife, to mourn his loss. He leaves behind him an adopted daughter, the daughter of an old friend and former law partner. He leaves behind him two dear grandchildren, the children of a daughter of his who died two years before his death, and he leaves also a host of friends who love him as sincerely in life and in death as it has ever been the fortune of any Member of this House to have been loved by those who knew him. Let these all catch consolation to assuage their grief from the fact that this man in his death left them the heritage of a stainless name, the tender memories of an affectionate husband, of a devoted father, and of a faithful friend.

Mr. Speaker, none of us are and none of us claim to be saints, but whatever our Christian creed and howsoever practice may be of its tenets, each of us can thank heaven for the firm faith that beyond the dark river stands the great Jehovah, and that the portals of heaven open wide ever to welcome the spirits of just men made perfect to an eternal life of unutterable happiness. Let us believe that this gallant spirit in his last moments consciously faced the end and with unfaltering faith in the Saviour of mankind peacefully, courageously, resignedly undertook his last great journey from his earthly home to heavens." Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, the custom long prevailing in this House of paying tribute to the memory of those associates called hence by Divine summons into another and better world is one fit and worthy to be observed so long as time itself shall last. It is a custom founded in love and affection and drawing its strength and support from that indefinable and undefined something that, in the presence of death, calls forth all that is best and tenderest and most charitable within us. When the last dread summons comes no entreaty, no tears, no beseeching can stay or impede the departure of him who has been called; and as we can not restrain, neither can we recall.

The friend and associate whom yesterday we knew we know to-day and to-morrow no more forever. In the broad way of life, where in conscious manhood he walked upright and erect, seen and known of all men, his figure no more appears. In the quiet, sequestered paths of life, where we were wont to hold sacred and sweet communion with him, the place where he was is void. Out of our lives, out of each and every pathway of life of each and every one who knew him, he has gone. Only the memory of him remains; and as we can not preserve the body, we meet to perpetuate in enduring and lasting form all of him that yet abides with us—his memory—the memory of that which was good and attractive in him and that which gave him a place in our hearts.

It was my privilege to know Mr. Lester before he came to Congress; it was my privilege to be his constituent during the first four years of his service here, and it was also my privilege to be a delegate to the convention giving him his first nomination to Congress and to assist in that nomination. Little did I suppose when, in 1888, I sat in the convention at Brunswick, Ga., and assisted in his nomination that in a few years later I would take my seat here to serve with him as his colleague. The formation of a new district after the census of 1890, among the other results, gave me almost ten years of service with him hère. When I entered the House he was the dean of our delegation, and so he remained until the hour of his death, respected and honored by all his colleagues.

Colonel Lester lived almost the allotted time of man. Could he have been permitted to serve out the time for which he had been elected, almost full threescore years and ten would have been to his credit.

The years he lived were not idle years, as the achievements he won and the things he wrought so well attest. Throughout his manhood, until the hand of affliction fell heavily upon him a few years ago, he was an active practitioner at the bar. He there won and established for himself a reputation for ability, for fairness, for aggressive earnestness in the cause he espoused, and for a fearless discharge of duty that will live through many years of time.

In forensic battle he was a foeman worthy of any man's steel, and his personal popularity was so great as to make him almost an invincible power before the juries in the many counties in which he practiced his profession. The verdicts accorded him, as shown by the court records, bear silent testimony to the strength and the power and, as well, the faithfulness of his services at the bar. Long before his record as a lawyer was made, however, he had made for himself a higher and yet a nobler record still, for he had proven himself a man. Great as was his courage, it did not exceed his patriotism, and when in 1861 the call to arms resounded throughout the South he was among the first to respond, and from then until Appomattox he bore a soldier's part, and no man bore it better. He was one of those heroic soldiers of the South whom hardship could not dismay nor danger make afraid. He saw his duty and, unfalteringly and unmurmuringly, through hunger and cold, through bloodshed and suffering, did it. For four long years, from one red battlefield to another, with courage undaunted, with hope undimmed, and with faith ever clear and strong, he followed the flag of the Confederacy through victory and through defeat, until it went down, never again to rise.

With his manhood thus tested and proven by fire, it is no wonder that his people, the people who knew him, loved and trusted him and were unstinting in the honors they heaped upon him in the years following the war. For nine years he was a State senator, and during the last three years of his service he was president of the State senate. For six years he was mayor of his beloved city of Savannah. At one time he was a formidable candidate for governor of his State, and that he was not elected was not due to any scant following or want of support in the end of the State in which he lived. elected to Congress in 1888, serving his first term in the Fifty-He was reelected eight times, making a total service to which he was called of eighteen years. Such length of service is not given to every man who is received in this body. Indeed, it is given to but few, and when it is given it is the indisputable evidence of character in the man who is so honored. Time, in its ceaseless revolutions, exposes this side and that side of a public man's life, until the exposure is complete and the people know and understand all that is in When that time comes, and it comes before eighteen years in the lime light, the people approve or they condemn. goguery, noise, and specious pleading may win for a while, but it is character and character alone that achieves permanent and lasting success. Mr. Lester stayed here because his people knew him. The eighteen years of service to which he was called was a tribute to his character. All the honor of his length of service, however, was not to him alone, for his people in honoring him likewise honored themselves. Creditable as it was to him to have and to hold the esteem and affectionate regard of those he served, it was equally creditable to them that they had the discernment to see and to know a worthy public servant and the gratitude to reward him.

The city of Savannah is the home of chivalry, of courage, and of patriotism. It is rich in the history of things done and in the lives of the men who did them. It is a city that stretches back to colonial days, and within its life is written the life of the Republic. It is a city of traditions and of memories that inspire to lofty ideals, and it was from this city that Mr. Lester came to Congress, and it was for this city that he gave the best service of his many years in Congress. Throughout his entire career he remained true to the high ideals of the people and the city he served, and no stain or blot in a lifetime of public work has ever appeared upon his record. No higher eulogy, no loftier tribute can be paid him than to say, as we in all candor and truth can say, he lived and died a clean and honest man.

The city from which Mr. Lester came preserves in marble and bronze, in song and in story, in eloquent speech, and in faultless diction the memory of those who have proven themselves worthy, thereby preserving and perpetuating virtues and excellences as an inspiration and an encouragement to the generations to follow. In this city there may have been and may be those more gifted in fluent speech and polished phrase than our dear departed friend; there may have been and may be those riper in deep and profound scholarship than he; there have been and are very many richer in wordly goods than ever he was; and yet, I venture to assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that not one possessed a kindlier heart, a truer manhood, or a more patriotic spirit, and not one ever gave to Savannah greater love I venture to assert further that not one has to his credit more and greater substantial achievements for the material good and real prosperity of his city than is to the credit of Rufus E. Lester. His record is made up; it is finished and complete, and as we can not add to it, neither can we take from it, so long as we reverence truth. His service here marks Savannah's great commercial growth. The extension of her transportation facilities, of her trade; the growth of her exports, of her bank clearings; the erection of her stately buildings, the expansion of her power and influence are all traceable to the recognition and assistance that he, with tireless and ceaseless energy, from year to year, prevailed upon the Congress to show and to give to the improvement of her great seaport; a recognition greater in some respects than that accorded any city on the Atlantic coast.

I do not know that any monument will ever rear its stately head to perpetuate the memory of his devotion to the city of his love; but, better than that, he lived to see his monument in the marvelous growth and development of this city and of the section of country in which he lived—a growth and development that came as a noble response to the things he did. And, better yet, he builded for himself in the hearts of his people, in their unfailing love and devotion, a monument more lasting and enduring than marble.

The value of his services as a legislator, however, is not to be measured alone by the value of what he did for his district; for while he held to the faith that his first duty was to those who sent him here, he was none the less, at all times and on all occasions, a careful, painstaking, and conservative legislator, and ever had before him the good of our common country. He was possessed of strong convictions, which, on proper occasions, he was ready to express, and his judgment was ever a factor in molding correct legislation and in protesting against that in which he did not believe. He was wise in counsel and courageous in action, and faithful always to the high obligations he assumed mean becoming a member of this hedr assumed upon becoming a member of this body.

Quiet and unassuming, Mr. Lester never boasted of his achievements, nor did he claim any credit for that which he did. He was content to have things done, for it was not for himself but for resul's that he labored. He was peculiarly free from the spirit of boastfulness, and his strongest and most striking characteristic was the candor and frankness with which he met all people and dealt with all propositions that came before him. He practiced no deception and he knew nothing of concealment. What he thought he spoke, and what he believed to be right he did. His inherent sincerity could never be hidden, and it was this quality, more than all others, that gave to him his hold upon the affections of those he served, and made for him a friend out of every man with whom he was here associated. He was a true and manly man—one whom it was a privilege to know and a still greater privilege to claim as a friend. His useful, unselfish life, the good that he did here and elsewhere, the sunshine of good cheer that he scattered wherever he went, the encouragement and assistance that he was ever willing to render, are things that we can not soon forget and that we will ever delight to recall. A gentleman by nature, he lived without fear and without reproach, and as he lived so he died.

Within the knowledge of those of us present, in the battle of life he fought a good fight and kept the faith, and now that he has passed from life unto death and we have met to pay sweet tribute to his memory, the thoughts that come to us as we retrospect his life are that his life was not in vain; that he performed the mission assigned to him; that he illumined the bright word "duty" and added a new glory to faithful and conscientious labor. The memory of his genial and wholesome nature, of his loyal and unswerving friendship, will ever abide with us, a benediction and a blessing.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, Col. Rufus E. Lester was one of nature's noblemen. To know him was to admire, respect, and love him. My only regret is that I was not permitted to know him earlier that I might have enjoyed his friendship for a longer period, and especially when he was in the full strength of manhood and before disease had impaired his physical qualities.

From the period of his young manhood to the hour of his death his strength, his energy, and his talents were given to the State he loved and which he so faithfully served. He had but barely commenced the practice of his chosen profession, the law, at Savannah, when there came upon this country a conflict the most notable in the history of the world. Colonel Lester was among the first to respond, and he gave his best service to the cause which he believed was right. Gradually advanced because of meritorious service, he rose to the position of adjutant on the staff of Gen. C. C. Wilson, in which position he discharged many perilous duties in a highly creditable manner. At the close of that conflict he returned again to the practice of law.

The citizens of Savannah, noting his integrity and his devotion to duty, did not permit him long to remain a private citizen. For nine years he served in the senate of the State of Georgia, the last three of those years as the presiding officer of that body. Upon his retirement from that office the people of his city elected him as their chief executive, in which position he served with great ability for six years. He was then elected to the Congress of the United States, and for eighteen years he represented in this Hall the First Congressional district of the State of Georgia.

During that entire period he devoted himself not only to the service of his State, but to the service of the nation, and every proposition which looked to the betterment of the nation and the advancement of its citizens received his cordial approval and his earnest support.

During sixteen years of that period he served on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, where his services were greatly appreciated by his colleagues on that committee, who always found him an earnest, intelligent worker, striving to perfect legislation which would develop the commerce of the country. His position upon questions which came before that committee was assumed without fear or favor and solely with the view of doing what he thought was absolutely right and fair.

Those who were closely associated with him were always impressed with his tenderness of heart and his affection for those he loved. They were not surprised, therefore, to learn that the accident which resulted in his death came from an effort on his part, prompted by the affection of a most tender heart, to look after the two little children—his grandchildren—intrusted to his care. No obstacle was too great for him to attempt to overcome, no path too steep or rugged for him to attempt to climb, if by so doing he could make more certain the safety and comfort of those two children.

The Speaker of this House conferred upon me the honor of being one of the committee which escorted his remains to his late home.

Arriving at the city of Savannah, we were immediately impressed with the sorrow which hung like a pall over that city—a sorrow which seemed to be personal with every man, woman, and child, from the greatest to the humblest, with whom we came in contact.

The services in honor of his memory at the church were largely attended. The city was represented by its chief officials. The bar association attended in a body, as did also the several fraternal societies to which he belonged—the Masons, the Odd Fellows, the Knights Templar, and the Knights of Pythias. In addition to these, and to the thousands of people who gathered on that occasion, was the association of Confederate veterans, his comrades in the service, many of them showing the effect of age and of hardships endured, and all of them by the evidence of grief, their genuine affection for their late comrade. At the close of the church service the remains were escorted to Bonaventure Cemetery. The services at the grave consisted of a prayer by the rector of the church, and a portion of the burial ritual conducted by each of the fraternal societies to which he belonged. While the grave was being covered with wreaths and bouquets of beautiful flowers, a quartet dered those appropriate and always beautiful hymns, I Would Not Live Alway, Asleep in Jesus, and Lead, Kindly Light. At the conclusion of these exercises the Confederate veterans, in honor of and as a last tribute to the memory of their comrade, dipped above his grave the flag which he had so faithfully followed. And there at early twilight, and just at the hour when the sun, in all its majestic grandeur, after its triumphal progress through the clear blue vault of heaven, was slowly sinking behind the western horizon, we laid to rest in the family lot and near the grave of his only daughter, whose death but shortly preceded his, the body of our late colleague. How appropriate the hour. His earthly career had been one of triumphal progress and success. He had faithfully discharged to the utmost degree the duties of every position to which he had been called until, at the evening of life, his work done—and well done—he sank to sleep, and there remains beneath the shadow of the spreading oak, the drooping cypress, and the towering pine.

The members of the committee turned their faces again toward the national capital, where their duties awaited them, conscious of the fact that they could best revere the memory of their late colleague by keeping ever before them his public career as an example of true devotion to public duty.

I have spoken of Colonel Lester and of his career. I would be recreant to the promptings of my heart if I did not in this hour of sorrow and of mourning extend my sincerest sympathy to her who was his companion in life for so many years and between whom no word was ever spoken that either would wish to recall. She who encouraged by her love and ambition his every effort, and who now with patient care and tender love guards the health and comfort of the two little grandchildren who were so recently bereft of a mother's love. Deprived of his counsel, his support, his love, she sits amid the ruins of a broken family circle and at her lonely fireside alone "waiting, waiting, waiting for the touch of a vanished hand, for the sound of a voice that is still."

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, so much has already been said, and said so well, of Rufus E. Lester's long and distinguished services to his State and country that I realize it is unnecessary for me to attempt to add anything. And yet my affection for him and my admiration for his ability and character prompt me to say a word. I knew Colonel Lester quite intimately and was very fond of him. For several years we had served together upon the same committee. It is not a political committee. Its work is directed toward the development of the whole country, and there is in the committee room of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors no political line and no sectional line.

While Colonel Lester was intensely devoted to his State and to the beautiful city of Savannah, where he lived, and ready to work and if necessary to fight for their interest, he was very broad in his views and his efforts were most earnest and patriotic for the progress and development of the Union. He never asked that favoritism be shown to the projects in his own locality. Keenly as he realized the great benefit conferred on his section by liberal appropriations for river and harbor improvement, he never asked that his own projects be approved at the expense of those from other sections of the country. He simply asked for fair play and was always ready to grant to others that which he insisted upon having for himself and for the people who had relied upon him as their Representative for so many years.

had relied upon him as their Representative for so many years. Practically all of Colonel Lester's life was given to the public service. His constituents were loyal and devoted to him, and in return he gave the best that was in him. With no thought of self, his service was absolutely disinterested. He was intensely patriotic. We all know how he loved the Southland. During the dark days of civil strife he showed that he was willing to die for its people. His military record was marked by a splendid fearlessness. He fought with the army of the South until the end, and when that end came he showed a like fearlessness in his struggle with the distressing difficulties which followed it. He resolutely devoted the rest of his life not only to the rebuilding of the stricken South, but to the welfare of his whole country. I am sure no one rejoiced more earnestly than he in the real Union which now exists. If there was in him any trace of sectional hate or bitterness, I never discovered it. When he passed away our country lost a very devoted and patriotic public servant.

Colonel Lester was a true southern gentleman—courteous, kindly, brave, the very soul of honor. He hated hypocrisy. He loved frankness, candor, and sincerity. The words spoken here to-day are not flattery. They are merited by a long and honorable record which is without stain. For many years he had not been well, and his work here was carried on in the face of difficulties which would have discouraged a less man. But he did not flinch. And he never inflicted his troubles upon his friends. He evidently believed with all his heart in the gospel of cheerfulness, and his genial presence always made the world seem brighter and happier. I sometimes think we do not fully appreciate how helpful is such a temperament. Companionship with Colonel Lester brought hope and courage, drove away melancholy, and made life better worth living. We shall miss this man who, in spite of physical ills, always carried sunshine with him.

I can not trust myself to speak of the more intimate relations of his life; but I do wish to extend my tenderest sympathy to one whose love and genuine helpfulness were indispensable for his happiness and for his success.

It had been my privilege on more than one occasion to visit with him the State of Georgia, and so I had been given an opportunity to witness the affection and respect in which he was held by the people of a Commonwealth to whom he had rendered such long, devoted, and effective service. It is pleasant to remember that in his lifetime he knew there was so much of regard and appreciation. I was prepared, therefore, for the deep grief shown by the people of his city and State when I attended his funeral. The people knew that they had lost a true and loyal friend, who had ever held their interests above his own. was evidently a very clear realization of the loss which had come to the city of Savannah, the State of Georgia, and to the whole

The passing years will show more and more clearly how great is that loss. He represented with absolute fidelity a noble constituency, which will ever hold in grateful remembrance this manly and useful life.

Nothing is here for tears, nothing to wall Or knock the breast, no weakness, no contempt, Dispraise or blame—nothing but well and fair; And what may quiet us in a death so noble.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, it is with no little diffidence that I venture to offer my simple tribute to the memory of Colonel Lester. Others who have already spoken knew him longer and possibly some of them knew him better, but none of them respected him more highly or loved him more dearly than I.

I feel, therefore, that it is not only my duty as a Representative from Georgia, but my right as his friend to add my simple wreath to the more complete, elaborate, and ornate tributes that have been paid him to-day.

Many men, Mr. Speaker, enjoy through life and at death a much higher reputation than they would have if their real characters were known. On the other hand, still other men, whose reputations are not all that could be desired, would be much more highly esteemed if their true characters were known. Fortunate, indeed, is the man who possesses and bequeaths to posterity the enviable combination of high reputation and real character. He leaves to his family and his people a heritage far richer and more desirable than lands and gold, than stocks and bonds. Our friend, Colonel Lester, had this good fortune in a most marked degree. He not only left a high reputation, but, better still, he left to his family and his friends the consciousness that that reputation was fully deserved, and was but the just reward of his noble character.

In every relation of life, civil and military, public and private, professional and personal, he uniformly exhibited those splendid traits of character that made him so highly respected and so universally beloved here and at home. Since his death I have frequently heard Members of this House, on both sides of the Chamber, make this remark about him: "He was a splendid type of the southern gentleman of the old school." To my type of the southern gentleman of the old school." To my mind, Mr. Speaker, this is the most splendid tribute that can be paid any man. It is the epitome of compliment, the climax of encomium, and I know of no case where it has been more appropriately said or more justly deserved. "A southern gentleman of the old school!" How eloquent are the words with the memories and traditions of the most courtly race of gentlemen who ever lived upon this earth! Just and fair to his causely politic and considerate of his inferiors and recognizing equals, polite and considerate of his inferiors, and recognizing no superiors save the God he worshipped and the woman he loved, the southern gentleman of the best type was a real cavalier, like the knightly Bayard, "without blemish and without reproach." High and unpretentious courage filled his soul most distinguished sons, and to lay my wreath of rue and gar-as naturally and as automatically as the air he breathed filled his lungs. He was as incapable of treachery or of double dealing as he was of either public or private dishonesty. Brave as a lion, tender as a woman, and simple-hearted as a child, he worshipped candor and abhorred deceit, he loved the truth and despised a lie, living his life under the clear skies of the Almighty and fighting his battles in the open.

As such a gentleman we loved Colonel Lester in life and as such we mourn him in death.

Of his public services and public career I will not undertake to speak in detail, as others have already done so. I will only undertake a very general summary. In his young manhood he devoted four of the best years of his life to the defense of his country, as God gave him the light to see, under the Stars and Bars, and no more knightly a soldier ever followed that historic banner through seas of blood and carnage to its final furling, with its honor unbesmirched and its glory undimmed by de-The same steadfastness of purpose and loyalty of that marked his subsequent career distinguished his military record; returning to a desolated and impoverished home at the close of the civil war, he was one of the most forceful, active, and influential of those patriotic Georgians who undertook and accomplished the work of bringing order out of chaos and of redeeming our State from the miserable misrule of the hated and hateful carpetbagger and of the still more hated and still more hateful "scalawag." In 1870 he was elected a State senator from the first senatorial district of Georgia, and for nine years he rendered conspicuous and brilliant service to the people of Georgia as a member of that body. During the last three years of his service he was president of the senate, discharging the duties of that office with uniform and unfailing courtesy and with broad and comprehensive statesmanship.

In 1880 he was a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor of Georgia, and had a large and enthusiastic following; but the convention being unable to make a nomination between himself and the late General Colquitt, he declined to allow his name to be used as a candidate in the bitter and unseemly wrangle that followed. A short time after this he was elected mayor of Savannah, Ga., and served as its chief executive for six years continuously, his record as mayor being clean, forceful, and satisfactory to the people of his city. In 1888 the people of the First Congressional district of Georgia elected him as their Representative to the Fifty-first Congress of the United States, his service beginning on March 4, 1889. From that date until his death, a period of a little more than seventeen years, he served continuously as a Member of this House, vigilant in defending the rights and active in supporting the interests of his immediate constituency, broad in his statesmanship, liberal in his views, and loyal in his devotion to the interests and welfare of the whole people. His most valuable service here was rendered in connection with river and harbor legislation, he having been for many years a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and for several years immediately preceding his death its ranking Democratic member. To his active interest and to his earnest, untiring advocacy the people of Savannah are largely indebted for the generous appropriations that have been made for her harbor, and to him the people of the entire State of Georgia are indebted for generous and unselfish aid and support for every deserving project that they have submitted to the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

As a Member of this House, few men have been so highly re spected and so generally beloved, and the sorrow with which the entire membership received the announcement of his death, in June, 1906, was deep, sincere, and general.

Mr. Speaker, skeptical philosophy might suggest that for the pulseless brain and throbless heart of our late colleague and friend there is no morrow; that when "dust to dust" is spoken all is said. I will not, I can not, subscribe to so cruel, materialistic a creed. Death does not, can not, end it all. Somewhere in the misty realm beyond the night life's broken cord is mended. Somehow, in the silent land beyond the grave, under divine guidance and in accordance with divine law, the spirit will be cleansed of all its earthly dross and, glorified and purified, shall stand at last in the presence of its Creator and "If this be not true, then indeed is all of our faith vain." If it be true, each of us may cherish the hope that in the life yet to come we shall meet in friendship and greet in love one of the most gallant, loyal, and loyable gentlemen that it has ever been my good fortune to know.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, as a North land of flowers upon his grave in the "Sunny Southland," where the mocking bird sings and the magnolias bloom.

shall not attempt to coin phrases of speech, for, after all, the best eulogy I can pronounce is the heartfelt expression of my respect and admiration for him.

During my service in Congress with Colonel Lester, it was my good fortune to be brought somewhat frequently in contact with him. When first elected to the Fifty-sixth Congress, upon a trip to Florida I spent some days in the beautiful city of Savannah, Ga., with its handsome avenues of foliage and asphalt streets, and was entertained by him. It was a pleasure to me to meet him in the House during our sessions, and I lived at the hotel at which he came to his untimely end. As a young man, I was attracted by his uniform courtesy and kindly and dignified speech and manner. I regarded him as a gentleman of the old school, a type of the true southern gentleman; as a wise and discreet statesman having the best interests of the South and of his country at heart.

Mr. Speaker, I believe fully in a reunited country, an in-separable union of sovereign States over which floats now and forever the Stars and Stripes; but I also treasure all the memories, traditions, and history of that part of our glorious Union in which I was born and reared. Its skies, it seems to me, are brightest, its climate the most balmy, and its people I regard as among the best and most conservative citizens of the Republic. I refer to the South with no feeling of sectionalism, but with pride in her past glory and in her present greatness and prosperity. Since Appomattox and the surrender of the Confederate army, when Robert E. Lee, the greatest captain of modern times-according to the present occupant of the White House, greater than Marlborough or Wellington, and surpassing even his last great adversary, Grant-commanded his soldiers to lay down their arms, the South has risen from the ashes of war and resumed once again her proud position in the sisterhood of resumed once again her proud position in the sisterhood of States. The great world's supply of cotton, iron, coal, timber, marble, granite, are in her fields and forests and mountains, and the great world's factories must do their work in her midst. In His own good time and in His mysterious way, through the storm of battle and humiliation of poverty and defeat, the Almighty has led the South out of the darkness into the light and showered His blessings upon her. We have a so-called "new Statk" but will be the in true, and our prouds have achieved South," but, while that is true-and our people have achieved success industrially after having passed through the crucible of war-I would not forget the sweet memories and traditions and glory of her past. The old South possessed an infinite idealism and conservatism which may yet prove the salvation of the

Of this old South, and yet withal abreast of the times in his work and activity, Rufus E. Lester was an exponent. His career did not begin until after the war, but in his bearing and manner he always impressed me as a representative of the manner he always impressed me as a representative of the old as well as the new South in which he was reared and with whose history he was identified. Born in Georgia in 1837, graduated at Mercer University in 1857, his active career began with his admission to the bar in 1859, and until the accident which resulted in his sudden death in June, 1906, his whole life was filled with activity and distinction. He was an honest, brilliant lawyer, a fearless soldier, a faithful, able statesman. Colonel Lester entered the military service of the Confederate States in 1861, soon after his admission to the bar, and remained in the service until the end of the war, having risen to the rank of colonel of the Twenty-fifth Georgia Volunteer Infantry. As a soldier, as well as in all his professional and public life, like the Chevalier Bayard, he was "without fear and without reproach." I am informed by his colleagues of the Georgia delegation that he did not know the meaning of the word "fear."

I shall not recount the military service of my departed friend.

It was as brilliant as his subsequent career as legislator, mayor of Savannah, and Member of Congress. It is sufficient to say that he served Georgia and the South, which he loved, fighting for the principles for which the South contended, in the Confederate States army, from the very beginning of the civil war until that last fateful day at Appomattox, when that banner, bearing the St. Andrew's Cross and the Stars and Bars furled forever in defeat, but unstained and undishonored.

After the war Colonel Lester resumed the practice of the law. He was State senator from 1870 to 1879, being president of the State senate in 1877, 1878, and 1879.

Avery, in his History of Georgia, refers to Colonel Lester as Repeatedly sent to the senate by the polished constituency of his district, twice president of the senate, and one of the leading favorites for governor in the last campaign, when Governor Colquitt was elected, Mr. Lester has richly deserved his unusual enjoyment of political leadership. He is one of the promising young men of the State, and the possessor of ability, eloquence, and decision. Rather a small person, yet with an erect, sturdy figure, and an open, characterful face, he has an unusually winning style of public speaking. His voice is silvery and resonant, his logic concise and clear-cat, and his language terse and fluent. Men have not been made firmer and more sincere than Lester. Possessing a blended simplicity and amiability of manner, he is a most fearless and positive person. An incident will illustrate the man, and it is an incident as uncommon as it is striking. He gave a client some advice about a deed that proved, after a stubborn litigation, to be unsustained by the courts. Several thousand dollars' worth of property was lost. As soon as he was able to do so Colonel Lester handed his client a check for the amount, and thus reimbursed his loss. It was a noble act of punctilious professional integrity, and it indicated an uncommon man.

Avery again says in his history:

Avery again says in his history:

The legislature of Georgia, in 1877, was organized by the election of Hon. A. O. Bacon (now Senator from Georgia) as speaker of the house and Hon. Rufus E. Lester as president of the senate. Major Bacon had evidenced such extraordinary qualities for a presiding officer that he was chosen speaker without opposition. Colonel Lester was also a fine presiding officer, directing the deliberations of a much smaller body, the senate, and one easier to handle, but his parliamentary qualities were none the less thorough than those of Speaker Bacon. Colonel Lester was also elected president of the senate in 1878 and 1879.

In the crusade against Governor Alfred H. Colquitt in one of the greatest and most exciting conventions ever held within the State of Georgia, after a campaign in which the whole State was aroused, Colonel Lester was one of the most prominent candidates for governor. Had it been possible under existing conditions to nominate anyone else but Colquitt it is likely that Colonel Lester would have been the nominee of the Democratic The convention, however, adjourned without any nomiparty. nation being made, Governor Colquitt being within a few votes of the two-thirds necessary; but having been, nevertheless, by resolution recommended as the choice of the party for governor, which choice was ratified at the polls.

Retiring from the State legislature, Colonel Lester became mayor of Savannah, one of the most beautiful and prosperous cities of the South, holding this office from 1883 to 1889, and from this position he was transferred by the voice of the people to this Hall as a Representative in Congress in 1889, serving from the Fifty-first to the Fifty-ninth Congress, both inclusive. As a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives he rendered valuable service in securing large appropriations for his city and State.

Just prior to his death, meeting him in the corridor of the Capitol, he informed me that he would not be a candidate for renomination, and I felt then it was most fortunate in view of his failing health that he should so decide. I pictured him in my mind returning to Georgia, there to live and die in his home, surrounded by his loved ones and spending his closing years in the peace and quietude which he had so richly earned by his faithful service to his State, the South, and the nation. it was not so to be. His death, which he faced as bravely as the enemy upon the battlefield, came before he was able to retire to the privacy of his home in Savannah, and fate decreed it should come not only without warning, but in a terrible form. His death was another case of vicarious sacrifice. In his search for the little grandchildren he loved so well and who had been his constant care, he met with the accident at the Cairo, in this city, which terminated his earthly career. All that loving hands and kind hearts could do was tenderly done, but it was impossible to restore his bruised body to health and strength. The shock which he received from his fall was too great in his condition of health or under any circumstances; and so, distant from the land he loved-the State of Georgia and the South-after a well-spent life, private and public, he passed into that "undiscovered country from whose bourn no traveler returns."

Had it been possible I would have accompanied all that was mortal of Rufus E. Lester to Savannah, but I was compelled to remain at my post of duty here. I accompanied him in my heart, however, from the capital city, across the Potomac, thence through Virginia and the Carolinas to the "Sunny South" to the beautiful Bonaventure Cemetery, under the archway and avenue of moss which extends throughout that beautiful God's acre through which we had driven some years be-There in the soil of the State of Georgia, amid everblooming magnolias, may his ashes rest in peace to await the resur-rection morning and the rising of the "Sun of righteousness with healing in his wings."

Mr. Speaker, a brilliant, useful, and unselfish career like that of Rufus E. Lester is an incentive to young men. His life was a benediction to his family, the people of Georgia, and his country. But why mourn for him? In the beautiful words of Longfellow, in his poem on Resignation, which have brought comfort and consolation to many in the hour of trial-

The air is full of farewells to the dying And mournings for the dead;

But oftentimes celestial benedictions Assume this dark disguise.

What seem to us but dim funereal tapers May be Heaven's distant lamps.

There is no death! What seems so is transition; This life of mortal breath Is but a suburb of the life elysian, Whose portal we call Death.

And so Rufus E. Lester, in the silence and darkness of the receding world, saw in the distance heaven's brilliant lamps and stood without fear before his maker, as he had stood fearless before his fellow-man.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Speaker, time pauses for those who wish to speak of the virtues of the dead, and the busy world, jealous of restraint as to other phenomena, suspends its energies in the presence of the dead.

Yesterday Rufus Ezekiel Lester was with us pulsating with life and character; to-day he is absent, and we look in vain for his familiar face. He once laughed in our joys and with bowed head shared our griefs. He was hopeful when our skies were roseate with success, and with equal magnanimity and gentleness put forward a protecting hand to ward off a painful blow.

He was human to the core and sensitive to the touch of every human call; he had run the gantlet of life's greatest experience and gathered from each an element of character and an added element of strength.

At Mercer University, in his native State, he spent years of his early life storing his intellect with knowledge and forging those friendships with other Georgia boys which in after years added happiness to his life as well as success to his plans. For two years more he dug into the mysteries of the law, laying the foundation for that future life of mutual combat and intellectual strife which marked his career.

Then came the civil war, that onslaught of American against American, which for four years deluged our land with blood. To the southern man there was but one thing to do, and that was to uphold the glory and traditions of the South. To the Georgian this was the imperative call of duty, and LESTER never faltered. He enlisted in the Twenty-fifth Georgia Regiment, and with it went forward to the scene of war. In the camp life of the sol-dier he was conspicuous for his manliness and his regard for duty. In battle he was a shining mark, fighting with a courage that gave proof of his exalted character.

At Chickamauga, where death and hell held high carnival for days, Lester seemed to be oblivious to all personal danger and to fight with the inspiration born of the thought that an honorable death is better than an inglorious life. Whenever danger was in the line of duty, there was Lester, and whenever he appeared other hearts took renewed courage and pressed forward against what seemed to be an impregnable foe.

Chickamauga was a memorable fight; fortune played for a while with the blue, then with fickle caprice turned to the gray. In one place the heroes of the Union were pressed by the heroes of the gray; in another the laurels of the gray were swept down by the heroes of the blue.

For three days and nights the carnival of death and destruction continued, and the Twenty-fifth Georgia was a part of a glorious brigade, with its colonel, Claudius C. Wilson, in com-At 1 o'clock at night that brigade crossed the Chickamauga River and, with the Twenty-fifth Georgia in the lead, went forward to the fray. At the great road crossing, whose four arms were to serve as indices to the coming fray, Colonel Wilson was ordered to take his brigade to the right and to unite with that of General Forrest and to obey his orders. Thus the Twenty-fifth Georgia marched into the very gates of hell, for on that day Forrest's command was in the very thickest of the fight. Hard pressed was this gallant commander at several times on that memorable day, each time to be relieved by the gallantry of Wilson's brigade, at the vanguard of which proudly waved the colors of the Twenty-fifth Georgia.

At one time this regiment was on the verge of annihilation and was forced to give back in sullen defiance, but, reenforced, it pushed forward again to a position from which it could not be dislodged, but at what a fearful cost—the battlefield was strewn with the corpses of friend and foe and the living fought with bleeding wounds, ghastly, yet sublime.

Night came, leaving Snodgrass Hill in the hands of Gen.
George H. Thomas, the "Rock of Chickamauga," with all the rest of the everlasting, glorious field in the hands of the exulting

After the storm came the calm, and in the reckoning with the heroes Col. Claudius C. Wilson sent these words forward to headquarters:

I respectfully ask the favorable consideration of the major-general commanding to the cases of my acting assistant inspector-general, First Lieut. Robert Wayne, and my acting assistant adjutant-general, First Lieut. R. E. LESTER. The first was seriously wounded in the leg while in the discharge of his duties, and Lieutenant LESTER was wounded in the head and abdomen under the same circumstances and had two horses killed under him. They were both conspicuous in the fight, riding fearlessly along the line in the thickest of it, distributing orders, rallying the men when broken, and setting an example to all of courage and devotion and of a cool and intelligent discharge of duty under the most trying circumstances worthy of all commendation. I acknowledge myself greatly indebted to them, and especially ask their promotion to the rank of captain in the departments in which they are serving.

I can not refrain from quoting further from one of the distinguished officers who fought along the line of gray:

While I recount the services of the living, I can not pass unremembered the heroic dead—the cypress must be woven with the laurel. The bloody field attested the sacrifice of many a noble spirit in the fierce struggle, the private soldier vying with the officer in deeds of high daring and distinguished courage.

While "the river of death" shall float its sluggish current to the beautiful Tennessee and the night wind chants its solemn dirges over their soldier graves, their names, enshrined in the hearts of their countrymen, will be held in grateful remembrance as the champions and defenders of their country who had sealed their devotion with their blood on one of the most glorious battlefields of our revolution.

Such was Rufus Ezekiel Lester on the field of battle under the inexorable call of duty; two wounds to his credit and two horses shot under him to their death. Conspicuous, courageous, heroic, Lester on that day proved his fitness to live and proved that he need not fear to die.

In the civil field he won an exalted name and character. In his own State he served the people as a legislator, being a member of the Georgia senate for ten years, during the last three of which he was president of that distinguished body.

For six years he was mayor of Savannah and for nine consecutive terms was a Member of this body, in the last of which he came to his lamentable death. It is an idle task to attempt to enumerate his services as a Congressman of the United States, for it is well known to all that he never shirked responsibility nor wavered in the full and exact performance of every duty devolving upon him.

In his long service as a member of the River and Harbor Committee he did excellent work for his city and district, a work that endeared him to the hearts of those who had made him their Representative. In this particular line of duty he labored not only for the interests of his own district and State, but for the interests of the entire South and for the whole country. While representing a district, and to a certain extent a State, he never forgot that his duties were dual and that he was to advance the interests of the whole country while battling for interests purely local.

In his Congressional experience he covered many long and faithful years and gained a wide acquaintance with public men of the entire country. So continuous have been his services that at his death he was the nestor of the Georgia delegation, and among all the Congressmen alive at the time of his death only eleven could boast of a longer service.

He gave about thirty-four years of his life to his city, his district, his State, and his country.

In war he did his best and achieved a glorious success; in civil life he was equally as faithful and worked out for himself a magnificent place in the affections of his people.

Judged by any of the standards that humanity employs the life of Rufus E. Lester was an entire success

He has fallen like an oak in the midst of the forest, but the works of his hands will live forever.

A glory that comes only with death may be said to come too late. Our friend was not so fortunate, for the refulgence of glory comes to him through long years of active life, sweetening its joys and mitigating its woes.

In the district where he was born he lived a long and honored life, and the greatest solace life has for any man is the continued esteem of friends and neighbors through advancing years.

Mr. BELL of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, Col. Rufus E. Lester was born in Burke County, Ga., in December, 1837. He graduated from Mercer University in 1857 and commenced the practice of law in 1859, and was a successful lawyer until he entered the Confederate service, in 1861, in the war between the States.

He remained in the service throughout the entire four years of this bloody and unfortunate conflict, and was a brave, unflinching soldier. He was adjutant of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of Georgia Volunteers, and won distinction as a fearless man and a loyal son of the South.

After the close of the war he returned to Savannah and resumed the practice of his chosen profession, and by his clean yet fearless method he won an enviable reputation for his sane judgment in matters of law and public questions.

He filled many positions of trust and confidence in his native State before he was elected to the Fifty-first Congress, and succeeded himself eight times to this high and honorable position.

It was not my privilege to have known Colonel Lester personally and intimately except for the past few years, but my knowledge of him leads me to say that I never knew a more perfect, polished gentleman. He was one of the standard bearers of my faith in the innate nobility of mankind. He was gentle, yet fearless; unassuming, but constant. His long life of public usefulness, his victories and defeats, serve to remind us that we have lost a friend and an able legislator. None of us can ponder this strong man's long service and constant devotion to his tasks and duties and fail to realize that he was a great man—great because he was good, for no man can be truly great without being good.

We all recognized the singleness of purpose which actuated him in taking hold of all public questions. His object was at all times to arrive at the truth, for he well knew that truth alone would stand the test and the criticisms of an everalert public, and the truth would ultimately avail any man in the discharge of the duties and confidence reposed in him. His absolute fairness and honesty made for him many warm friends and admirers, who to-day mourn his loss. Never a sign of selfishness, greed, or mercenary motives marked his career in this House. He was ever watchful of the interests of his constituents and the welfare of his State and the Union.

No narrow views ever actuated him and no selfish ambitions ever swerved him from the plain path of duty to his people and to the country. He had the full confidence of every man in this body, because it was well known to us that his honesty of purpose, his zeal and firmness in his desire to promote good legislation, could never lead him astray. He despised shams and crookedness, and in his efforts to prevent schemes and measures which he thought detrimental to the best interest of his country he would sometimes show that he was human.

He was generous to a fault, and I am told that no beggar ever left his door hungry, and that he was not satisfied with merely contributing money for the relief of the suffering and distressed, but, always possessed of that superb benevolence which characterized him, he often during his life and the busy days of his career would visit the humblest homes and liberally shower comforts upon the poor, the sick, the hungry, and the homeless, remembering the Bible injunction, "He that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord.'

Is it strange that we mourn the loss of such a man as Rufus E. LESTER? Such an influence is a heritage to any man, and certainly a great consolation to his friends and loved ones who are left to mourn him.

I recall how helpful he was to me, and his kind offices in my behalf will never be obliterated from my memory. He used to ask me to sit and talk with him, which I did, no matter how busy I might have been, and he would always give me good advice, and admonished me that to be successful in the right way was to be true and deal fairly and face to face with all men and with all questions.

It was my privilege, as a member of the House committee, to follow him to his last resting place. His funeral was attended by all classes, the high and low, the rich and poor, and it was a touching scene to witness his old comrades in war as they stood with tear-dimmed eyes and sang-

Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to Thy bosom fly.

He was buried in beautiful Bonaventure by tender, loving hands, there to await the last call in the great day of judgment, when he will receive that glad welcome, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." dation of the world.'

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, in June last, when the unexpected death of Rufus E. Lester, of Georgia, was heralded around Washington, many eyes were dimmed with tears.

He was loved and respected by the thousands in this city who knew him. Ever genial, kindly hearted, he had a good, cheerful word for everyone. To know him was to love him. I could not let this occasion pass without a few brief words of tribute to the memory of our departed friend.

For three sessions of Congress it was my good fortune to sit in the same tier of seats in the House. In passing up and down the aisle he always stopped me to bid me a good morning or to say some kindly thing about the Bronx, my home borough, and of the city of New York. We had many mutual friends in our respective homes. After a visit to his beloved city of Saour respective homes. After a visit to his beloved city of Savannah he would come to my desk with affectionate words of greeting from old friends, coupled with the invitation, "Come down to see us when Congress adjourns. Your many friends, including myself, will make it pleasant for you." He had appointed the son of a dear friend of mine to West Point, who is now a rising young officer in the United States Engineers, and of whom we were both justly proud.

As a legislator he was industrious and zealous in the discharge of his varied duties. He accomplished much for his district, the First Georgia, for his State, and for the country at large. I had occasion to ask his help in certain waterway improvements. His answer was, "Certainly; anything that I can do will be done," and it was done largely with his aid. He was the same generous, kind friend to others. He loved his fellow-men and in return was loved by them. When in Savannah a few years since I discovered that it was these characteristics that made him so popular with his people.

He was a typical gentleman of the old school, a splendid type of American citizenship. His voice is forever still; his kind, loving words will be heard no more, but his life's work will live in the history of his country and in the hearts of his friends. He has passed to the other shore, to the home prepared for him by the Great Father who showed his love for men by giving his only beloved Son for their ransom.

There is no death! What seems so is transition; This life of mortal breath Is but a suburb of the life elysian, Whose portal we call Death.

As a Union veteran, proud of the heroism and bravery of the men engaged in the conflicts of the civil war, a common heritage commemorating the deeds of our American citizen soldiery, I place this tribute to the memory of my late comrade, Rufus E. Lester, of Georgia.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, when the flag over this Capitol fell to half-mast on the 18th day of June, 1906, we knew that another one of the Fifty-ninth Congress had passed to that un-discovered country and into that "temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," to answer there to the everlasting roll

In this Chamber the sad announcement was made of the death of our long and much loved associate-Rufus E. Lester, of Georgia-as the result of a most unusual and fatal accident.

Another of the innumerable caravan gone before had solved the problem of life, and had made clear to himself the hard question from Job through the world's ages, "If a man die, shall he live again?" We, too, shall have the answer, but only after we shall have traveled the same road of our lamented associate and those who have preceded him. Until then, as conscious, intelligent beings, we can only hope and believe that we shall live again. We consult the evidences about us, we are impressed with the active, wondrous, and eternal workings of the natural forces which pervade the world in which we have our being, we consider the sacred lessons which come down to us through Divine revelation, and more than all we consider the innate and instinctive promptings of our daily lives and the spirit which animates us, and thus we believe in the immortality of our souls, and in our feeble way to cherish the faith that after death we shall live again. While we do live our uncertain lives on earth, we strive to live wiser and better lives, and to that end to model our careers after the precept and example of our upright, virtuous, and successful fellows who have made the race and reached the goal. In this light we view our departed brother.

In doing this we find in Major Lester what honest character, faithful effort, energetic determination, and prompt attention in human affairs will accomplish in any worthy man's career. Without those useful aids of wealth and family influence in early life he found that to himself alone must he depend for success if it should ever come to him.

The road was a hard and a rough one. Deprivation and discouragement were more often his companions than comfort and substantial cheer. But such companions, unwelcome and repulsive at the time, are in reality—though unconscious to usblessings in disguise. They constitute the school of experience where all must learn. It is a school which hardens us, which teaches self-dependence, self-reliance, frugality, patience, and forbearance. It compels us to persevere until we overcome by our honorable endeavors the obstacles which confront us. such an experience we acquire, too, a feeling of sympathy for those in misfortune and for those who fail in the conflict. He Major Lester it can be said that he had all these qualities. always had a kind cheer and a helping hand for the poor boy and the struggling young man, and nothing so quickly aroused his sense of justice as the abuse of the power of one in authority over his subordinate. Rising from the ranks of the plain people, he was democratic in its most comprehensive meaning, and he detested the boss and the dictator in party or municipal affairs, and his independent temperament did not hesitate to denounce the selfish intriguer wherever he appeared to stifle the popular

He was at the same time quick to antagonize any visionary, demagogic appeal made to arouse the public mind for the enactment of schemes which in his mind were inimical to the public good. He was a close attendant upon his duties in this Chamber as a Representative of the people, and often when it seemed most painful to him to walk in and out of the Capitol in the last year of his service; yet he was at his seat considering the work of the session and voting on measures he thought the public interests required. He believed with the poet that:

That through the channels of the state Conveys the people's wish is great; His name is pure; his fame is free.

In reviewing the career of Major Lester in this body we are forcibly reminded of the brief tenure of political life to the most of us. Looking over the 386 Members of this House, many in their young manhood and in the best of physical health, with ambition and with talents equal to the best, an onlooker would conclude that a large proportion would still be found in their present places for many years to come. And yet the contrary A retrospect to only eighteen years ago to the Georgia delegation then in Congress will suffice.

On March 4, 1889, Rufus E. Lester entered this body from that State. His colleagues at that time were Charles F. Crisp, John D. Stewart, Judson C. Clements, Allen D. Candler, Henry H. Carlton, and George T. Barnes. It seems but a short time since that I listened to their sturdy voices in answer to the roll call or in debate. And yet not a single one now remains here. They have all gone from these places. Rufus E. Lester was the last. I recall Charles F. Crisp when he was the honored Speaker of this body, and who was one of the most eventempered, impartial, and just men that ever wielded a gavel in any deliberative assemblage of fellow-men and peers

And there was Henry G. Turner, judicial, able minded, serious in thought and action, and measured and logical in debate, with rarely a gesture and with few words of suave and patronizing rejoinder. It was the famous Speaker Reed who remarked of Turner that he regarded him as the ablest jurist and scholar of the House. Then there was the genial, good-humored George T. Barnes, of large body and well-stored brain, and, above all, of matured and righteous judgment and honest endeavor.

Judson C. Clements, who, with Allen D. Candler, alone survive in life all of this splendid constellation of Georgia's eminent and forceful delegation of those days, long since retired, and was honored with a position on the court of the Interstate Commerce Commission, where his genial presence, his love of justice, and his inflexible integrity honors that body as the same qualities made him conspicuous and admired here.

Judge Candler is spending the evening of his days in active pursuits among his friends and former constituents in Georgia, honored and esteemed by all.

The others of that honored and once familiar group were all men of eminence in their own State, while some were of national renown. But, as I have said, how transient is fame and how brief our tenure of political life! Of the entire Southern States only two of the Representatives who were Members of this body from there but eighteen years ago remain in Congress to-day, and they go out with this session.

Of the twenty-five from Illinois only two remain; of the eleven from Iowa but one remains; of the thirty-seven from New York but two remain; of the thirty-two from Pennsylvania only three remain; of the sixteen from Texas not one remains, and none of the delegation from Mississippi.

In fact, of the entire membership of the National House of Representatives eighteen years ago, only nine will remain on the 4th of the coming month. It was of such associations of men that Rufus E. Lester was a part. They performed with him their representative duties, and performed them well, and then one by one they departed from these scenes. Others come, fall into line, and serve their allotted course and soon retire. is thus the endless procession appears and disappears, while the drama still goes on.

Some ambitions are satisfied, while some are not. Some are successful and achieve greatness, while others have failure and

One faith alone remains for all—the hope and the blessed assurance of a glorious immortality, so that as I began I also close, with the ever-recurring question: "If I die, shall I live again?" -And the answer is the same for all: "There is no

There is no death! The stars go down To rise on some fairer shore. And bright in Heaven's jeweled crown They shine for ever more.

There is no death! The leaves may fall And flowers may fade and pass away. They only wait through wintry hours The coming of the May.

There is no death! An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread;
He bears our best-loved things away,
And then—we call them dead.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the tragic death of Colonel Les-ter brings us together to-day in his memory. My first service in this body was in the Fifty-first Con-gress, a body of men recognized as one of exceptional strength. Colonel Lester also began his service in the same Congress, and was honored by continuous reelection until his death.

In the Fifty-first Congress no delegation exceeded in strength that of the Empire State of the South. Indeed, it is doubtful if any other delegation equaled it in aggregate ability in that Con-

There were Lester, Turner, Crisp, Grimes, Stewart, Blount, Clements, Carlton, Candler, and Barnes. When the present Congress convened only one of those ten names remained upon the roll, and that was Colonel Lester. Nearly all the others had not only gone beyond the companionship of this House, but had passed to the Great Beyond, including Crisp and Turner, the giants among them all.

Colonel Lester had no more sincere friends than those who as Members of this House stood opposed to his political views, many of whom were also opposed to him in the dark days of the great civil war.

When death has come the survivors can always trace back the great chain of events that has led to the last and final scene; but unconsciously and unknowingly we tread the road that leads to the end of life. Madam Sevigne, in describing the drowning of a friend in the Rhone, says:

The day was stormy, but he would not be dissuaded. Death had an appointment with him in the whirlpool at the foot of the cliff, and he must keep his engagement. He entered the skiff alone, and the waters have just given up their dead.

So with Colonel Lester. The pleasant voices of children, thought to be in danger upon the roof, led him up the fatal ladder to the skylight through which he fell to his death.

He had gone through many a battle unscathed. He had met danger by flood and field, and disease had sorely stricken him, but It was a great shock to his many friends who had known him so long and so well when the sudden announcement came that his kind and honest life had been crushed out.

No more genial and courteous soul ever added his example to the good side of the record of the American Congress than Rufus E. Lester, the thorough gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the resolutions heretofore adopted, and as a further mark of respect to the memory of Rufus E. Lester, I move that the House do now

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet on Monday at 12 m.

Your memorialists, the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, respectfully represent:

That there is now pending in the Congress of the United States a bill appropriating the sum of $15,000 for the payment of the expense of conducting the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico:
Therefore, be it

Resolved, That your honorable bodies are requested to make the same appropriation for conducting the Territorial legislative assembly of this Territory, to be used in the employment of clerks not now allowed by the organic act, and in the same manner as is contemplated by the appropriation for the relief of New Mexico; and be it further Resolved, That Hon. The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, in favor of an appropriation of at least $200,000, to be expended under the direc-tion of the Secretary of the Interior, to aid in controlling the flood waters of the Gila River, in Graham County, Ariz.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TERRITORY OF ARIZONA, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

I. W. F. Nichols, secretary of the Territory of Arizona, do hereby certify that the annexed is a true and complete transcript of house memorial No. 2, which was filed in this office the 2d day of February, A. D. 1907, at 3 o'clock p. m., as provided by law.

Secretary of the Territory of Arizona.

MEMORIAL.

o the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the twenty-fourth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, respectfully represent that—
Whereas what is known as the "Gila Valley," in Graham County, Ariz., embracing 100,000 acres of fertile land, lies adjacent to and on both sides of the Gila River; and
Whereas after twenty-five years of toil and hardship incident to the pioneering of the arid west approximately 50,000 acres of said land has been reclaimed and transformed from a desert waste into fruitful lands until now, under the almost magic touch of the industrious husbandman, it provides comfortable homes for 5,000 people; and
Whereas in the cultivation of the said land the people are entirely dependent upon the waters of the said Gila River for the purposes of irrigation, said waters being conveyed to the land by means of canals, all of which are owned and operated by the farmers themselves; and
Whereas the frequent floods and unprecedented high waters of the past two years have swept away dams and dam sites, destroyed canals, and devastated hundreds of acres of the most fertile land, sweeping away the accumulation of a lifetime in an hour; and
Whereas this devastation and ruin can only be checked, the perpetuity of these homes and the continued cultivation of all these fertile acres be secured by the partial control of said flood waters; and
Whereas the settlers of this said Gila Valley are all people of very moderate means and in no way capable of coping with a situation so serious;

Therefore your memorialists most earnestly request that in order to perpetuate these hundreds of homes, to protect and conserve this, one of the garden spots of the arid West, the officers of the United States Geological Survey be at once instructed to make a careful examination of the Secretary of the Interior, for the controlling of the said flood waters of the Gila River in Graham County, Ariz.

The secretary of the Territory is hereby directed

NEILL E. BAILEY, Speaker of the House, A. J. Doran, President of the Council.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, in favor of the enactment of legislation to increase the per diem allowance of the legislators of all the Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TERRITORY OF ARIZONA, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, TERRITORY OF ARIZONA, 88:

I. W. F. Nichols, secretary of the Territory of Arizona, do hereby certify that the annexed is a true and complete transcript of house memorial No. 1. which was filed in this office the 2d day of February, A. D. 1907, at 3 o'clock p. m., as provided by law.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the Territory of Arizona, at the city of Phoenix, the capital, this 5th day of February, A. D. 1907.

[SEAL.]

W. F. NICHOLS,

W. F. Nichols, Secretary of the Territory of Arizona.

MEMORIAL.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress as-sembled:

Your memorialists, the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, most respectfully represent that:

Whereas since June 19, 1878, the date at which the compensation of members of the legislative assembly of this Territory was fixed at $4 per day, the population and business of the Territory have greatly increased, the legislative business of the Territory has so grown, the needs for legislation so enlarged; and

Whereas the necessary expenses of members of the Territorial legislature, including only the cost of living in decency and comfort at any of the hotels at the capital is alone greater than the allowance per diem, viz, $4 per day; and

Whereas it is now an absolute pecuniary sacrifice upon the part of a legislator to accept a commission and serve in this legislative body because of the facts as above set forth: and

Whereas in consequence thereof it has become difficult to induce persons of proper qualifications to accept seats in either house of the legislature:

Whereas in consequence thereof it has become diment to induce persons of proper qualifications to accept seats in either house of the legislature:

Therefore, your memorialists most carnestly and respectfully petition your honorable body to increase the per diem of the legislators of all Territories, as the necessity now so urgently demands:

That the secretary of the Territory is hereby directed to forward copies of this memorial to the honorable President of the Senate, to the honorable Speaker of the Honse of Representatives of the United States, and to the Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH, Delegate to Congress from Arizona.

SENATOR FROM UTAH.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in reference to the seat of the senior Senator from Utah, and I ask that the resolution may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate

the resolution, at the request of the Senator from Arkansas, and it will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution reported by Mr. Burrows from the Committee on Privileges and Elections June 11, 1906, as follows:

Resolved, That REED SMOOT is not entitled to a seat as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I wish to say in the beginning that in what I shall say to-day I have no personal feeling whatever of unkindness toward the Senator from Utah. I have served on a committee with him for some four years; the relations between us have always been pleasant, and he has always been courteous to all the members.

I wish to say further, Mr. President, that I do not think any feeling of bias of a political character influences my judgment or has caused me to make the remarks which I intend to submit. I say this the more readily because some seven years ago when the question was pending in the other House with reference to the seat of Brigham Roberts, while he was a Democrat, I said to numerous Members of the House that I thought the proper practice was first to swear him in, and after he was sworn the case should be referred to a committee, and if that committee found the facts as stated they ought to declare that he was not qualified to sit in the House.

I will add also, Mr. President, that I do not think any religious prejudice biases my judgment in any way whatever. have always regarded the provision in the Constitution which guarantees the right of religious liberty as perhaps the most important paragraph within that great instrument.

I think I may say here that in all probability I would have contented myself with simply casting my vote had it not been for certain occurrences which took place years ago that peculiarly and especially affected the people of the State in which I live, and therefore caused an interest there that probably does not exist in many other localities throughout the nation. Of that, however, I will speak hereafter.

I wish, in the first place, to say a few words in regard to the constitutional power and the constitutional right of the Senate to pass the resolution reported by the committee. I do not make any pretense, and never have, of being a great constitutional lawyer, and therefore I do not hope to convince, and I hardly expect to enlighten, many members upon this floor. But in a matter of this kind where we sit, I think, as judges, each man must judge the Constitution for himself, with such lights as he can procure or secure, and the final judgment must be between him and his conscience as to what he thinks the Constitution means.

There are three questions arising in this case which have been discussed with reference to the constitutional power and the right of the Senate to exercise that power. The first of these to which I shall refer is the clause which provides that two-thirds of the Senators may expel any member of this body. I do not think it will be denied by anyone that as a question of power simply—I am not discussing the right at this time, but of absolute power—the Senate can, by a two-thirds vote, expel any member of this body for any reason, or without reason, and it would be binding and effective. There is no appeal from it. It does not follow, however, because that power exists that it ought to be exercised unless it was right to exer-

I have been told that certain Senators on this side of the Chamber hold the view that while we have the unquestioned power and the right in this particular case, based upon this testimony, to expel the Senator from Utah, we have no right to pass the resolution reported by the committee, which simply excludes him.

I will not go into a lengthy citation of authorities. I will insert some in my remarks, by permission of the Senate, that I do not read. But so far as I have been able to ascertain there is no case either in this House or the other where any Senator or Member has ever been expelled for any act which occurred prior to the time when he was elected. It is laid down by the text writers, so far as I have been able to read them there may be exceptions—that the Senate has no right to expel to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 8303) to establish the foundation a member except it be for some act after he is elected to the office or some wrongful act which occurred in connection with that election. Some of the authorities go so far as to say that even after he is qualified and elected the Senate has no power to expel him unless it be for some wrongful act done in connection with his office as Senator.

To that last proposition I do not fully agree. I believe that a Senator might be guilty of many acts in no way and in no wise connected with the duties of his office here for which it would be the duty of the Senate to expel him from this body. The authorities in regard to that, as I said, I will insert here-I have not the strength to read them all.

I think, however, if I am not mistaken, in an early case in the Senate, that of Humphrey Marshall, of Kentucky, where it was proposed to expel him for an act done prior to the time of his election, the Senate held that they had no jurisdiction, and the case was dropped and it was never brought to a vote.

Therefore, repeating that so far as the power goes there can be no question about it, so far as what the proper action should be if the facts in this case show that the Senator from Utah is not entitled to a seat on this floor.

A majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections have eported a resolution which simply declares that he is not entitled to a seat.

In my own judgment, this is the proper practice: If a man comes to the Senate with his credentials in due form from the proper authorities, showing that he is qualified to be a Senator, I have always believed that the proper practice is that pursued in this case, to administer the oath, and if protests and objections are filed, to refer them then to a committee of this body, and give him a chance to be heard, and then report upon the facts; and if they find that he was not qualified at the time he took his seat, simply to so declare by resolution.

I have said that the power to expel is unlimited. state that, in my judgment, it is not any more unlimited, not any more absolute, than the power contained in another clause of the Constitution which says that each House shall be the judge of the election, returns, and qualification of its own mem-The power to pass on qualifications given by the Constitution is just as great, just as absolute, just as binding, in my opinion, as the clause which provides for the expulsion of a In that same clause is the provision I have just quoted, that the Senate judges of the election.

Mr. President, the universal rule in cases of contest is that a Senator who bears the credentials is seated, a hearing is had, and if they find he is not entitled to a seat under that clause, that he is not elected, by a simple majority vote they so declare.

That same clause gives the power to the Senate to pass on the qualifications precisely as it gives the power to pass on the question of his election or the correctness of the returns.

As I have already said, when a man presents his credentials to be sworn in in due form, I have never thought it was fair that he, by a simple objection, should be set aside and not be permitted to participate in the organization of this body; but if after due investigation and full hearing on his part it was found that he was not qualified, we have the same power, the same right, to so declare as we would have the right to expel him if we thought his action justified it.

Now, I want to read a number of authorities in the House. There is one that I was able to find in the Senate. state, however, that most of the cases in the House arose during the war or immediately after the war, and that it is true that at that time party feeling and party prejudice existed in that body to a greater degree than at any other time. It may be that many of these decisions lose a part of their force for that reason, because most of the objections where men were excluded from the House were on account of disloyalty. But they are not all that way.

There is one case to which I especially refer, which was in po wise connected with the war, nor did the question of loyalty or disloyalty arise in any way. It is the case of Whittemore, of South Carolina. I simply state the facts. The full case, with a number of others, will be found in the speech of Mr. Tayler, of Ohio, made in the House January 23, 1900, in the case of Brigham Roberts.

Whittemore was a Member of Congress. A committee of that body found that he had sold a cadetship, and the committee so reported to the House of Representatives. He ascertained that fact and resigned his seat in the body; and the House thereafter determined that he having resigned they had no right to expel him, and simply contented themselves with passing a a resolution of censure. He went back to the State of South Carolina and within a short period of time, I think not exceeding sixty days, he was reelected and returned to that body, with his credentials in due form. The question arose as to whether it was proper that he should occupy a seat there. General Logan, of Illinois, led the fight against him. I will say, too, that it was a Republican House and that Whittemore was a Republican in politics. General Logan said, amongst other things:

It is said that the constituency had the right to elect such a Member as they may think proper. I say, No. We can not say that he shall be of a certain politics, or of a certain religion, or anything of that kind; but, sir, we have the right to say that he shall not be a man of infamous character.

There is a good deal more in that same line.

The House by a vote, by a large majority, 130 to 24, denied him a seat in that body for this act committed during his prior service. They exercised the right and they did not claim to find that it was necessary to expel him, but they declared that he was not qualified for a seat in the House of Representatives.

There are a number of other cases of the same character. They have again and again asserted the right. In the Senate of the United States, in the case of Thomas, of Maryland, they refused him a seat in this body, not by expulsion, but on the ground that he had committed acts prior to the time of his election which disqualified him as a Senator.

Those are the two propositions that I lay down. I want to repeat once more that the power to expel is not greater or not more absolute than the power to pass upon the qualifications of any Member.

But we are met with the proposition, Mr. President, that we can not add—the way it is usually put, I believe—that we can not add any qualifications to those which are laid down in the Constitution

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BERRY. I yield.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before the Senator leaves the Whittemore case from South Carolina and the point he was discussing there regarding the exclusion of Mr. Whittemore from the House of Representatives, I should like to ask him if there was any point made as to whether it took less votes to keep him from becoming a Member of the House than it would take to expel him?

Mr. BERRY. There was no such contention, I think, ever ade. If so, I have overlooked that in the case.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then, as I understand the Senator's position, it is that in the case of Smoot in order to adopt the resolution that is now pending it would require a two-thirds vote.

Mr. BERRY. No; I beg pardon; that is not my position, but directly contrary to that. I have taken the position that we can adopt the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges, and it requires only a majority vote to determine the qualifications of any Senator. That is the position I take.

Mr. HOPKINS. If in the Whittemore case the point was not made as to whether Mr. Whittemore could be excluded from becoming a Member by a certain vote, is it any authority on the question as to whether in the case of Reed Smoot his exclusion should be by a majority or a two-thirds vote?

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Illinois will permit me, I will say that it depends altogether on the character of the resolution upon which we are acting. The resolution re-ported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections is simply that the Senator from Utah is not entitled to a seat in this body, and that requires but a majority vote, whereas if you seek to expel him under the other clause of the Constitution it requires a two-thirds vote.

Mr. HOPKINS. What I want to know from the Senator from Arkansas is whether the Whittemore case is an authority on the question of expulsion or exclusion?

Mr. BERRY. It is an authority on the right of the House of Representatives to exclude.

Mr. HOPKINS. But in that case, as I understand the Senator, the point was not made as to whether the exclusion should be by a majority vote or by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. BERRY. The report of the case that I have before me does not show that any such question was raised. The only question discussed was whether or not the House of Representatives had a right to pass upon his qualifications, and to add a qualification to those that were not named in the Constitution of the United States, if those were all the qualifications that were required. Everyone understood that this only required a majority vote. Some said it ought to be a motion to expel, which, of course, requires two-thirds. In regard to that I was about to say in my judgment there are no qualifications specified in the Constitution of the United States, but there are certain disqualifications named in that instrument. The framers of the Constitution did not undertake to lay down all the objections that might be raised. They stated that no person shall be a Senator—putting it in the negative—unless he is 30 years of age, has been a citizen of the United States for nine years, and a resident of the State from which he is chosen. I repeat, I am going to read to sustain that position from the proceedings of the convention that made the Constitution, so as to show that it was not the purpose or the intention-but the facts show that it was directly the reverse of that-to undertake to name all the qualifications that a Senator or a Member of the other House should have. I want to read something on that point. First, Mr. President, I will read what was said by John Randolph, of Virginia, in 1807. Among other things he said:

If the Constitution had meant (as was contended) to have settled the qualifications of members, its words would have naturally run thus: "Every person who has attained the age of 25 years and been seven years a citizen of the United States and who shall, when elected, be an inhabitant of the State from which he shall be chosen shall be eligible to a seat in the House of Representatives." But so far from fixing the qualifications of the Members of that House the Constitution merely enumerated a few disqualifications within which the States were left to act.

It is said to the States: You have been in the habit of electing young men barely of age. You shall send us none but such as are live and twenty. Some of you have elected persons just naturalized. You shall not elect any to this House who have not been seven years citizens of the United States. Sometimes mere sojourners and transient persons have been clothed with legislative authority. You shall elect none whom your laws do not consider as inhabitants.

I repeat that Mr. Randolph lays down the proposition that I repeat that Mr. Randolph lays down the proposition that the Constitution never intended that the disqualifications named there should be the only disqualifications for which a man should be excluded from this or from the other body. To sustain that position I will now quote from a speech made by Mr. Tayler, of Ohio, in the Brigham Roberts case. In that speech-and I shall get to it in a moment-he states what occurred in the Constitutional Convention. But I will first read what Mr. Tayler said:

what Mr. Tayler said:

It is a notable fact that in the first draft of this constitutional provision which provides for qualifications of Representatives in Congress the language was affirmative and positive, and that when it was finally presented for adoption it appeared in the form in which we now find it.

The slight contemporaneous discussion in the Constitutional Convention was upon the provision in the affirmative form. Why was it changed to the negative? Surely not for the sake of euphony, and certainly not to make it more explicitly exclusive.

In the report of the committee of detail, submitting the first draft of the Constitution, this section read in the affirmative and as follows:

Every Member of the House of Representatives shall be of the age of 25 years at least; shall have been a citizen of the United States for at least three years before his election, and shall be at the time of his election a resident of the State in which he shall be chosen.

In the discussion Mr. Dickinson opposed the section altogether, expressly because it would be held exclusive, saying he was against any recitals of qualifications in the Constitution. It was impossible to make a complete one, and a partial one would, by implication, tie up the hands of the legislature from supplying omissions.

Mr. Wilson took the same view, saying:

"Besides a partial enumeration of cases will disable the legislature from disqualifying odious and dangerous characters."

The next day in that discussion it was changed to the nega-

The next day in that discussion it was changed to the negative form, and the provision was brought in as containing certain qualifications purely, but it was never intended to be the recital of all the qualifications. Why, Mr. President, as has been frequently decided, as I have said, in the House of Representatives, other disqualifications except those mentioned can be used against a man. Are we bound to admit a man to a seat in this body who is a confessed felon and may be fresh from the penitentiary of his State, it may be unpardoned and disqualified to even vote in the State in which he lives, and yet must we say that he is entitled to occupy a seat in this body unless he is expelled by a two-thirds majority?

Not only that, but take, for instance, the case of an insane man. If such a man should be sent here, will any Senator tell me that the proper method would be to expel him from this body, for no wrongful act of his, but simply because of his misfor-This Senate undoubtedly has the power to protect itself against criminals or against those who would disturb or interfere with its proceedings, and would anyone contend that expulsion would be the proper method of procedure as to a man who exhibited symptoms of insanity?

So I return to the original proposition, and say that this Senate can exclude a man if he be a notorious felon, if he has been convicted of crime prior to the time of his election. If we had not that right, Mr. President, it would be impossible for the Senate to protect itself against vicious characters or from being overrun by those who had no regard for honesty

Mr. HOPKINS.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President— The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. If it does not disturb the Senator-

Not at all.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to call his attention to the fact that an insane man would not be able to qualify, and hence could not take the necessary obligation.

Mr. SPOONER. And could not accept the office.

Mr. HOPKINS. And could not accept the office, Mr. BERRY. Mr. President—

Mr. HOPKINS. One proposition before I sit down, and I shall not interrupt the Senator any further.

Mr. BERRY. Very well.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator has been reading from the speech of Judge Tayler, of Ohio, in reference to the Brigham Roberts case.

Mr. BERRY. Yes. Mr. HOPKINS. My remembrance—I have not examined that matter for some time, but I was a Member of the House at the time that discussion took place-my remembrance is that there was a majority and a minority report, and that the minority report contended that Roberts could not be excluded except by a two-thirds vote or kept from taking the oath of office.

Mr. BERRY. Not all of them made that contention.

Mr. HOPKINS. But that was the position of the minority, Not of all of them.

Mr. HOPKINS. The majority contended that Mr. Roberts could be excluded by a majority vote

Mr. BERRY. And he was, Mr. HOPKINS. But that if he were permitted to take the oath of office and be placed on the rolls of the House he could exercise in that body the same rights as every other Member of the body; that the only way the House could get rid of him was by expelling him, and that that required a two-thirds vote. So that the debate which was had was on the proposition as to whether Roberts should be excluded and not permitted to take the oath of office and be placed on the rolls by a majority vote or whether he should take the oath of office and then be expelled by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. BERRY. I beg the Senator's pardon. There were those who participated in that debate who held, as the Senator has stated, that Roberts must be sworn in, and that then the only way to get rid of him would be to expel him by a two-thirds majority. There were a number of others who held that he ought to be sworn in, and that then the case should be referred to the proper committee, where he would have an opportunity to be heard, and that after a full investigation, if that committee reported that he was disqualified, then they would vote to exclude him; but they objected to voting to exclude him upon the mere objection of a Member, contending, and properly contending, that if you can exclude one Senator or one Member by the objection of a Senator or a Member you could exclude another, and in many cases in that way change the majority of the organization. There were some, I admit, who held to that principle; and there were others who held, as I hold, that the mere administering of the oath to him did not change the situation; and this Senate, by the adoption of the resolution which went to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, showed that it took that view of it. If I am not mistaken, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows], either in this or in some other case, stated upon the floor that he would not object to the Senator taking the oath, because he had the proper certificate.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator will wait until I get through.

Mr. HOPKINS. Very well. Mr. BERRY. And then, with the objection or protest or whatever it might be termed, the case should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and after full hearing before the committee, where the Senator from Utah himself could be heard to show that the charges against him were not true, then, if the Senate thought he was not qualified to a seat in this body, they could exclude him by a majority vote, and that it was not necessary to expel him. It is the same as in the case of a contested election, where, as a rule, the contestee is permitted to take his seat-

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President— Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator will let me get through with what I am stating first, and then I will yield.

The contest goes on. If it is determined that the man was never elected, a simple vote of the majority gives the seat to the other man and excludes the contestee from the House or the Senate, as the case may be. Therefore this provision with regard to qualifications being in the same clause of the Constitution that each House should be judge of the election and should judge as to the qualifications, the power to do that in this case is just as great as it is to declare that a man is not elected.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

Mr. BERRY. One word, and then I will yield to the Senator. I say here to-day, if there was no contest, if a Senator appeared with his credentials, and a protest was filed which declared that he had never been elected, or that he had not been fairly elected, or that he had been elected by fraud, and that was supported by sufficient authority, the Senate could take it up, refer it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and if that committee found that there was no election it would not take a two-thirds vote to keep that man out of this body any more than it would take a two-thirds vote to keep him out if he was disqualified.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, if the Senator will allow me. As to the Roberts case-

Yes. Mr. BERRY.

Mr. HOPKINS. There was a committee appointed to investigate the question as to whether or not he should become a Member of that House. That committee divided, as I understand it, on the proposition as to whether he should be excluded or expelled; but both the minority and the majority of the committee agreed, as I remember it-I have not looked at it for several years—that if he was permitted to take the oath of office and have his name placed on the rolls of the House, then, under the Constitution, he could only be deprived of his seat by a two-thirds vote. Hence the majority of the committee took the position that, inasmuch as he had not taken the oath of office and was not on the rolls as a Member, they could meet him at the threshold of the House of Representatives, he being a confessed criminal at the time, and refuse to permit him to take the qualifying cath.

I hope the Senator will not take any more of Mr. BERRY. my time, but will let me get through. He is making a speech nearly as long as mine.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will not interrupt the Senator further. Mr. BERRY. I do not agree with the statement of the Senator as to the Roberts case.

Mr. BERRIT.
Ar. RURROWS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does t yield to the Senator from Michigan? Does the Senator from Arkansas

Mr. BERRY. I yield to the Senator from Michigan. Mr. BURROWS. Allow me just a word Allow me just a word in reply to what the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] has said. It has been decided by the Senate in contested election cases over and over again that the fact that a Senator has been sworn does not cure any defect in his qualifications. In the case of Roberts, to which the Senator from Illinois has referred, he was not permitted to take the oath, but my recollection is that Senator Balley, now a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, stated in the committee that if the Senate should find that the Senator from Uah was disqualified for any reason the disqualification could be enforced "after the oath is taken as well as before."

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

Mr. BERRY. A little later I will yield to the Senator from

I repeat, Mr. President, that in the Brigham Roberts case and I am familiar with that case—there were a number of Democrats-and I hope the Senator from Illinois will hear what I have to say on that matter.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am following the Senator.

Mr. BERRY. I say there were a number of Democrats who I know voted against the resolution as presented, which prohibited Roberts from being sworn in, who announced that if he was sworn in, as he had a right to be on his certificiate in due form, and it was then found by a committee that he was disqualified by reason of the confirmation of the charges against him, they would have voted not to expel but to exclude him from the House, and who insisted that the proper practice was to let him first take the oath, because he had the proper certificate.

I should like some Senator to tell me what distinction there can be made in this clause of the Constitution where it says that the Senate is the judge of the elections and qualifications of its members. If we can by a majority vote say that a man is not elected, we can by a majority vote, beyond any doubt, say that he is not qualified, the only question being whether or not we can add any qualifications except those mentioned in the Constitution.

I do not think any Senator here will insist that if the Senator from Utah after having been sworn and his case had been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that committee reported that he was not 30 years of age, that he was not a citizen of the United States, and that he was not an in-habitant of the State from which he had been chosen, this body could not have declared that he was not qualified at the time and have excluded him from this Chamber by a majority That is the proposition.

I say that the framers of the Constitution never intended or expected to set out in that instrument all the qualifications for a Senator or a Member of the other House. They simply stated them in the negative, that no one shall be a Senator who shall not be 30 years of age, nine years a citizen of the United States, and an inhabitant of the State from which he was chosen, hat is what they placed in that instrument.

I again call the attention of the Senate to the fact that if there is no power in this body to say that a convicted boodlerif we had such a case as that brought before us here, as we have not-a man who had been notoriously guilty of crime after crime, who had been convicted and served a term in the penitentiary, would have to be sworn in and then that we should be obliged to let him remain here unless a two-thirds vote could be secured to expel him, when, as I said before, the authorities say—not all perhaps, but a great majority of them—that you can not expel a Senator at all for any act which he committed prior to the time of his election. If that be true, then there is no way to exclude him from this Chamber. He may be If that be true, then known as a vicious character; he may be insane; he may have an infectious disease, and yet, Mr. President, we are told that it is a dangerous idea to exclude him by a majority, and yet they admit a majority of the Senate, in passing upon his elec-tion, may exclude a man from this floor. There are a number of cases, at least in the other House, where a man was sworn in and afterwards turned out of his seat.

If they can pass upon that, why is it not equally dangerous in that case as it would be in the case I have mentioned?

In discussing the question as to our power and right I-have spent more time than I intended. The authorities to which I have referred will be found in the speech of Mr. Tayler, to which I have already referred.

Mr. President, the next question, and the great question, is, Do the facts in this case, as shown by the testimony before the committee, warrant either a majority or two-thirds of the Senate in saying that the Senator from Utah is not entitled to a seat in this body?

Mr. President, it is admitted by the chairman of the committee. and, I think, by all, that there was no proof before the committee that the Senator from Utah had ever practiced polygamy. It was admitted that he had but one wife. That is no longer in dispute. The questions which are left, in my judgment, and they are vital in this case, are—he being a high official, with great power in the Mormon Church—whether or not the fact that that church has notoriously violated the laws; whether or not his association amongst the presidency and the twelve apostles from day to day; his voting to sustain a president who admitted and confessed before the committee that he had been violating the law many years after Utah was admitted into the Union-I say Mr. President, the question is whether or not such facts should operate to prevent him from holding his seat in the Senate.

Another question is whether or not any church, under any name, I care not what it is, can assume power and authority to violate the law and defy the Government of the United States or any State of this Union, and yet try to shelter themselves behind the constitutional privilege which guarantees religious liberty. That was the contest in Utah for years and years. liberty. From the time the Mormon Church was organized, or at least from the time polygamy was proclaimed, they always justified themselves upon the ground that it was a religious belief; that the law could not interfere with it; that they were a church which was in direct communication with God Almighty Himself; that He revealed His will by revelations to the head of that church or some of the governing officials, which were binding upon the conscience, and they dared not hesitate to obey, even though a revelation was in direct conflict with the Constitution of the United States or the laws of the land. That was their position for years and years

The Supreme Court settled that in 1878, and settled it forever. Yet, Mr. President, for years afterwards-and the testimony taken before the committee shows it—for years afterwards they continued to claim that polygamy was a religious belief; that it was binding on their consciences, and that they had the right to determine that and take the consequences. Even before the committee the president of that church boldly and defiantly said that since the manifesto issued by Woodruff in 1890 he had continued polygamous relations with his five-I think it was different wives; that since that time eleven children had been born to him; that he believed it was his duty under the revelations that had been made to pursue that course, and that he would take the chances on the law. That is in the testimony and it will be found in the record. He is the all-powerful man in that church. I think the Senator from Utah has himself testified that the twelve apostles, of which he is one, only have advisory power; that they advise the president, but that the final decision rests with President Smith. And yet, Mr. President, after the Mormons had agreed solemnly in the constitution of the State—after they had been admitted into the Union upon that solemn pledge—the president of their church tells the committee openly and defiantly that he has violated the law; that it was his religious duty to violate it, and therefore he would take his chances on the law.

Now, Mr. President, I want to read from the speech of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows] a few words in regard to the Senator from Utah and his opinion in regard to President Smith. The Senator from Michigan in his speech said that it was reported in the Deseret News, the organ of the Mormon Church in Utah, that on the 6th of October, 1905-that is, since Mr. Smoot has been a Senator here and since this investigation has been under way-he said:

I believe that the Latter-Day Saints, who have the spirit of God in them, never had more confidence in a man or a set of men than they have in the presidency of the church to-day.

I am indeed thankful for my standing in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints [Mormon]. When I study the history of the church I find that it is at all times the same. I am not ashamed of the power and position of the Mormon Church. I say to Joseph F. Smith to-day, this people will never turn against thee on the testimony of a traitor.

That was in 1905, and the Senator from Utah tells us, Mr.

President, that the church is the same; that it has not changed. I agree to that proposition. I agree that they believe to-day as they have always believed, and as the Senator from Utah said in his testimony, if I remember it correctly, that he believed the revelation proclaimed by Brigham Young in 1852 as having been given Joseph Smith some time in the forties came from God. That revelation, the Senator says, permitted polygamy, and the doctrine of the leaders of his church, as construed by Brigham Young himself, did not only permit polygamy, but it commanded polygamy.

The Senator from Utah says again, in another part of his testimony, that he believes the members of that church do receive revelations direct from Almighty God, and that if such a revelation should come to him, not through the head of the church, but if he himself should receive a revelation from God, which was in conflict with the oath that he had taken here and his duty as a Senator, he would leave the United States before he would obey his oath and obey the Constitution of his country.

Mr. President, I heard it stated the other day by one of his friends that it required a good deal of assurance upon the part of a southern Senator, who a few years ago was engaged in making war upon the United States, to come here and say that the Senator from Utah should be expelled because of his want of loyalty to the Government of the United States.

I desire to say in answer to that suggestion, Mr. President, that if we were at war with the United States it was done openly in the face of all the world. We threw down the gage of battle to more than three times our numbers, and we fought it to a finish and stood ready to take whatever punishment might be inflicted. We never pledged fidelity to this Union and to the Constitution and then sought by indirection to violate it from day to day. When our great chief laid down his arms at Appomattox he promised for us future peace and submission We have kept that pledge, and we will keep it to to the laws. the end. I do not believe you can find a southern Senator who, if called before a committee and asked the question what he would do if he had to choose between the commands of any church or any other governing body and his oath and the Constitution, would not answer at once that he would stand by his oath and by the Constitution of the United States. I do not think one of them would seek to leave the country in order to evade doing that which we swore we would do when we came here as Senators.

Mr. President, it is not possible for me to go all over this tes-But you can warp and twist it as you like, and yet at last the issue comes back to the proposition for which the Mormons have always contended, that the clause in the Con-stitution which protects them in their religious liberty author-izes them to practice polygamy, because it was commanded by the head of the church and came by revelation direct from the Lord himself. But Chief Justice Waite, in the Reynolds case in 1878, speaking of the claim that polygamy was justified as a religious institution, said:

To permit this would be, in effect, to permit every citizen to become a law unto himself. Government can exist only in name under such circumstances.

Stanley Matthews said, in another case:

A free, self-governing commonwealth is founded on the idea of the family as consisting in and springing from the union for life of one man and one woman in the holy estate of matrimony, and that all political influences are to be withdrawn from those who are practically hostile to its establishment.

Mr. President, it is true that the proofs do not show that the Senator from Utah has plural wives, but, as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows] said in his splendid speech the other day, he is associated in governing powers with those who approve and practice polygamy. He is associated with those, and acting in concert with them day by day, who believe and practice it. Eight out of the twelve apostles, so the Senator from Michigan stated in his speech, have been guilty of keeping up polygamous relations even after the manifesto of Woodruff. which was published in 1896. Bear in mind that this manifesto of President Woodruff does not claim to be a revelation, but simply a manifesto issued by the head of the church that they shall no longer practice polygamy or indulge in polygamous relations. President Smith when asked the question by this committee if that changed the views of the Mormon people first answered it did not. Then he added, "At least, it did not change my views. I speak only for myself." We all know that it did not change them. The Senator from Utah in the address I have read says the church has not changed. "It is to-day the same, and it will be the same for all time." I do not quote his exact language. He said also that he believed this revelation in regard to polygamy came to Joseph Smith directly from the Lord. If he believes that, he believes as he has always believed, that it is a regulation, an order from the church which permits any man to practice it. For years he has been one of the twelve apostles. He knew that his fellow-apostles were violating the law. There is no word in this testimony anywhere to show that he has ever raised his voice against it, but on the contrary he voted for Joseph Smith for head of the church, knowing all these facts. As the Senator from Michigan correctly quoted the law, whoever aids and abets, countenances and encourages, or acts with those in pursuance of a line of policy which is in violation of the law is equally guilty with the men who do it

Mr. President, the Senator says the church is the same for all In view of that statement I do not think that he can justly complain if we go back to review some of the acts of this church in the past—and if it is the same for all time—to see what those acts were. If any excuse were needed for going back, I can say that the minority of the committee have already gone back to 1850 to assert, if not in justification, at least in the way of mitigation or excuse for polygamy in Utah, the fact that President Millard Fillmore and again Franklin Pierce, as President, in 1852 appointed Brigham Young to be governor of Utah; that they knew of the polygamous practices; that they knew his view on that subject, and thereby the minority seek in some way to make two Presidents of the United States and the United States Senate a party to it. Therefore whatever its action in the past may have been, if the church is the same for all time, I repeat we are perfectly justified in speaking of the past acts of the institution.

President Buchanan said in one of his later messages that it was no longer possible to enforce the laws of the United States in the Territory of Utah; that the Government officials, if I remember it correctly, had left the Territory; that there was no law except the law of the Mormon Church; that they alone judged, and if history can be believed they often judged men in secret, without a hearing, and executed the judgment without the knowledge of the party until he was called upon to answer for it. The whole history of the church from its very inception through its entire pathway through life has been strewn with the wrecks of violated laws, of outraged justice, harboring eternal hostility to the laws of the United States, and now to the laws of the State of Utah. Not only that, but its greatest effort has been to fasten upon this country a system of polygamy which would, in the language of Judge Waite, destroy the very foundations of the Government.

I said in the beginning of my remarks that perhaps I would not have spoken had it not been for a matter that peculiarly touched the people of my State. I do not desire to offer any excuse for presenting it. It was the act of the Mormon Church, and the Senator from Utah says the Mormon Church is the same for all time. In 1857 I lived in the county of Carroll, in the State of Arkansas. In the spring of that year there left that county and two adjoining counties between a hundred and forty and a hundred and fifty, including men, women, and children, emigrants for California. They consisted of the best citizens in that country. It was a large train. It excited large interest throughout the section of country from which they went. had about 600 head of cattle, several mule teams, a number of wagons, and each head of a family had more or less money; how much I do not know. Late in the fall or the early winter the news came back that the train had been assaulted by the Indians far out West, and every soul had perished.

Later on there came news that some of the children, how many we did not know at that time, were saved, and that they were in the hands of the Mormons in Utah. Our Senators and Representatives here called upon the Interior Department. An agent, a Mr. Forney, was sent there by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He gathered those children together, sixteen of them, who had been preserved from the massacre on that fatal 13th day of September. He brought those children back to Leavenworth, and there Colonel Mitchell, of our county, went and met him and took charge of the children.

I was a boy 17 years old on that day when they were brought to the village court-house. I saw them as they were lined up on the benches, and Colonel Mitchell told the people whose children they were, at least whose he thought they were. There were sixteen of them. One little girl, I distinctly remember, had had an arm broken by a gunshot wound. It had not united, and the arm hung dangling by her side. I have seen much of life since that day; I have seen war along the lines of the border States in all its horrors; but no scene in my life was ever so impressed upon my mind as that which I saw there that day presented by those little children, their fathers, mothers, brothers, and sisters dead on the far-off plains of Utah and their absolutely without means with no human being to lock to they, absolutely without means, with no human being to look to.

A short time after Forney had gotten through, news came that it was not the Indians alone who had committed the massacre, but that the Mormons had participated. When he first got the children, he reported to the Secretary of the Interior, and you will find it in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that they had been so frightened and scared by the Mormons that he could get nothing from them; that they would not talk; and that it was long before he could gain their confidence. The oldest of them were 5 or 6 years of age, and perhaps there was one 7 years of age. But when they got back to Leavenworth and from there to Arkansas, they had lost the fears that had been instilled in them by the Mormon families in which they had lived. They did talk. They could not tell much, but they could tell that white men and not all Indians assisted in committing the massacre. They could tell it was a white man who came into their corral and induced the emigrants to give up their guns; that it was white men who drove the wagons in which they rode; that it was white men who shot the wounded men who had been placed in one of the wagons. The inquiry possibly would have gone on, but war came on not a great while after. It was almost impossible, so Mr. Forney reported, to get any testimony whatever. But the war came on and time rolled by.

Twenty years afterwards, however, there came to the Government officials so much knowledge of the participation that this church had in the massacre of the immigrant train that John D. Lee was arrested and brought to trial. He was a Mormon of long standing. He has said himself that he had fourteen wives. He was with the Mormons at Nauvoo and in Missouri. He was the trusted friend and lieutenant of Brigham Young for a number of years. Young had him appointed farmer for the Indians, and he held that Government office at the time of the massacre. The first trial I think resulted in a hung jury. On the second trial he was convicted and under the Utah law was sentenced to be shot.

Mr. President, at that time there was printed a book, bound either in sheep or calf, a leather-bound book, in which appeared the entire testimony given on that trial. As I remember it now—I read it twenty-five years ago and reread it—it contained also the speeches of the attorneys, the charge of the court, the verdict of the jury, and to that was attached these confessions of John D. Lee as to the manner in which this massacre was perpetrated.

I desire to say now before I quote from Lee that I have been unable, and I have tried in various ways, to get a copy of the original book. I tried through two officials of the Senate and they failed. I asked the Senator from Michigan. He tried to get it and went to the Library for that purpose, but it had disappeared from there.

But some two years ago a man wrote a book which he called "The Mormon Menace," and in that he copied the confession of Lee so far as it relates to this massacre. I desire to say here to-day that I have read that confession as it was printed in the book to which I have referred, and I assert now that this book is a true copy in all essentials, and I think in every particular, of the original confession made by Lee. Efforts have been made of late years to discredit this confession. I was told some time ago by a man from Utah that John D. Lee was a martyr; that the Gentiles had had him shot, and that he had never made any confession. But I repeat that that book shows the history of the entire trial, and that Lee was corroborated absolutely in all the essential particulars by the witnesses who testified on that occasion. A number of those who testified had participated with him in the massacre which had taken place, and so swore upon the stand.

Mr. President, what were the facts? I have before me Lee's confession. I will not undertake to read at any great length from it, but I say to the Senate to-day that in all the history of the world, not excepting the massacre of St. Bartholomew, except in the number who perished, no more inhuman, cruel, diabolical, infamous massacre was ever perpetrated than took place on the 13th day of September, 1857, at Mountain Meadows, in the Territory of Utah. It is not pleasant to read it. It is not pleasant for me to speak of it. I state here to-day upon my honor that it gives me no pleasure to repeat anything that would wound the feelings of any innocent man. The Senator from Utah is in no way and in no wise responsible for that massacre. It occurred more than four years before he was born. I know that much about him, learned since he has been here, to say that in my judgment he could not and would not approve it. But bear in mind he has said that the church is the same for all time. He believes that and believes in the church. He has indorsed whatever has been done by the leaders of that church; at least if he has not, he has remained silent and has never protested. I do not believe that he or any other prominent member of his church to-day would stand upon this floor and say that they did not believe every revelation which has ever been published as coming through the head of the church from God Almighty himself. I repeat that he is not responsible for this thing, but he upholds and sustains and is one of the powerful factors to-day in the institution that perpetrated this act. I will read a few passages and let us see who was responsible. Let us see whether or not the Senator can say that it was not done by order of the church. Lee says:

Those who were connected with the massacre and took part in the transaction were moved by a religious duty. All were acting under the orders and by command of their church leaders. The immediate orders for the killing of the emigrants came from those in authority at Cedar City. I and those with me moved by virtue of positive orders from Brother Haight and his associates.

Before I started on my mission to the Mountain Meadows I was told by Brother Haight that his orders to me were the result of full consultation with Bishop Dame and all in authority. The massacre was decided on by the headmen of the church.

President Haight, as I understand, was president of what is called a "stake." Mr. Worthington, the Senator's attorney, stated before the committee that next to the president of the church the greatest man in power is the man who is president of a stake in the locality where his authority extends. Therefore I say these orders came from President Haight of the stake, and Lee said that Haight assured him that it was after full consultation with Bishop Dame.

Again, the confession says:

Brother Haight said that unless something was done to prevent it the emigrants would rob every one of the outlying settlements in the south, and that the whole Mormon people were liable to be butchered by the troops the emigrants would bring back with them from California. I was then told that the council had held a meeting that day to consider the matter, and it had been decided by the authorities to arm the Indians, give them provisions and ammunition, and send them after the emigrants.

Further along he says that the Indians surrounded the emigrants at Mountain Meadows and the emigrants corralled their grants at Mountain Meadows and the emigrants corrafted their wagons and for two or three days they defended themselves with great bravery. There were six or seven of them shot in the first assault of the Indians, but they killed a number of Indians and held them off. Lee continues that he believes the emigrants would have succeeded in defeating these Indians altogether. He says:

On Thursday evening Higbee, chief of the Iron Danites, and Klingensmith, bishop of Cedar City, came to our camp with two or three wagons and a number of Danites, all well armed. I can remember the following as a portion of those who came to take part in the work of death which was so soon to follow—

This was the Mormon camp at Mountain Meadows.

Then he names Brothers John M. Higbee, chief of the Iron Danites, and also first counselor to Brother Haight; Philip Klingensmith, bishop of Cedar City; Ira Allen, of the high council; Robert Wiley, of the high council; Richard Harrison, of Pinto, also a member of the high council, and a number of other officials, and then a number of names of those who are not officials. Then he says:

I then told all that had happened at the Meadows, so that every person might understand the situation. Brother Higbee reported as follows:

"It is the orders that the emigrants be put out of the way. President Haight has counseled with Bishop Dame, and has orders from him to put the emigrants to death; none who is old enough to talk is to be spared."

Brother Higbee then said substantially that the emigrants had come through the country as our enemies, and as the enemies of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

I want the Senator to hear this:

The Danites then in council now knelt down in a prayer circle and prayed, invoking the Spirit of God to direct them how to act in the matter. After praying, Brother Higbee said:

"Here are the orders," and handed me a paper from Haight.

The paper read, in substance, that we were to decoy the emigrants from their position and kill all that could talk.

He goes on to state, and probably I will print more of his language in my speech, that they gathered there at the Meadows, where these men with their wives and children were defending themselves against the attack of the Indians. He says it was arranged that he should go inside the corral and promise the emigrants that if they would give up their arms that the Mormons could and would protect them from the Indians and bring them back to Cedar City. What occurred there, I think, would touch the heart of anything human. I do not turn to it just at this moment, but he says that when he entered the corral men, women, and children gathered around him; that they were burying two of their leaders who had been killed by the Indians, and that they gathered around him, and many thought that the day of deliverance had come. Some of them were suspicious and doubtful as to the purpose. But before he went in there Lee and Haight and Higbee and Dame, all officials of the Mormon Church, agreed that if the emigrants gave up their guns, which they did, the guns should be placed in wagons in front; that in another wagon the wounded emigrants should be placed, and behind them the wagon containing these sixteen little children, and next to them came the women, and behind them came the men. He states what the orders were, and they were carried out to the letter. As they marched along he was to give the signal of attack on the wounded men in the front wagon, then that each Mormon was to fire upon one of the men belonging to the emigrant train and the Indians were to attack Then he describes it in the minutest detail.

Mr. President, it is too horrible for me to go over it all, but he tells the terrible story of how these Indians murdered the women and the Mormons shot the men, and how a little boy who ran from the Indians to Brother Higbee, as he calls him, for protection prayed for safety, and this Mormon churchman, a member of the church, too, and not only that but an officer, brained the 14-year-old boy with the butt of his gun. Then he goes on to tell the story of the horrible massacre of the women and many children, how they were left unburied, their clothing stripped from them, and how the little children, those in the wagon, were taken afterwards to the different houses.

I wish to show to the Senate to what extent men can go and will go when misled by religious frenzy, when a man is taught to believe and does believe that God Almighty communicates directly with the leaders of the church, and that he is bound not only for his temporal welfare, but for his eternal salvation to obey absolutely the first presidency and the twelve apostles, of whom the Senator from Utah is one.

I wish now to show what occurred afterwards. Lee says:

After the dead were covered up or burled (it was not much of a burlal)—

He adds "that it was not much of a burial"- the brethren were called together and a council was held at the immigrant camp. All the leading men made speeches: Bishop Dame, President Haight, Bishop Klingensmith, Brothers Higbee, Hopkins, and myself. The speeches were, first, thanks to God for delivering our enemies into our hands; next, thanking the brethren for their zeal in God's cause, and lastly, the necessity of saying that the Indians did it alone.

Mr. President, some of the men who died on that terrible day I knew as a boy knows a man. Captain Baker and his son day I knew as a boy knows a man. Captain baser and ms son and a man who bore my name, I think distantly related, had been guests at my father's house. I knew many of the families. I knew the little children after they grew to manhood and womanhood since the war. On the 10th day of last August I saw a lady, now 54 or 55 years of age, who was one of the little girls a haby then. She told me that at the time it or little girls, a baby then. She told me that at the time it occurred she was nearly 6 years of age. I asked her how much she remembered of the details of the horrible massacre. stated that it was very difficult for her to distinguish that which she remembered from that which had been told her later on, but there was one fact which had been burned upon her memory and that remained with her through all the years that had come and gone; that even in the night she would awaken and scream for years afterwards, as the picture came to her mind. She said: "I remember standing by my mother, holding onto her skirt, while my mother stood with my baby brother in her arms, and when the white man, not an Indian, raised his gun to take the life of my mother, she said: 'God, have mercy on my children!'" That, this lady told me last August, That, this lady told me last August, she had never forgotten.

Mr. President, can you fail to understand my feeling, knowing those people as I knew them, and when I have seen those children as they came back, and when this man Lee, who was a long-trusted lieutenant of Brigham Young and at one time was captain of the Danites, and says here in various ways that he had only executed the orders?

Mr. President, he does not say that Brigham Young had knowledge of this slaughter before it was committed. Upon the contrary, he says a man was sent from Cedar City to get permission to slaughter these people. But the man did not return until after the horrible deed had been perpetrated, and when he did return reported that President Young said, "Let the emigrants pass."

He says, furthermore (and if any man doubts my word I will read it from the book), that after it was over a council was held and he was detailed to go to Salt Lake City and report it to the president of the church, Brigham Young; that he went there and laid the facts of all the horrible details before him; that President Young said at that time that he feared this would be the greatest blow that the church ever had, but told him to come back again next morning. He came back, and Young said he had prayed over it and that Brother Haight had sent him word that there was not one of these emigrants who was innocent, but they were all guilty, and he said, "Brother Lee, I am going to let it pass, but impress upon all the brethren and all the members of the church the absolute necessity of putting it on the Indians and denying forever that the Mormons had any part or parcel in it."

Is that all? No. Lee said that there were 500 head of cattle and that part of them were divided among those who had committed the murder, after the brand of the church was put on 50 of the cattle by order of Brigham Young himself. He said that he took back word as to what disposition should be made of them and that the brand of the church was put on 50 of the cattle. There were 500 head of cattle, he says. It presume, athough he does not say so, that the 50 were the tithe that went to the church, the one-tenth part of the property of these slaughtered people.

Now, I want to say once again, I hope no Senator will undertake to misrepresent me in regard to it. I have already repeated twice that I think this terrible massacre occurred before the Senator from Utah was born; that he is in no way either directly or indirectly responsible for it; but I do say he is bound to know of this and many other acts of the church in the past and that he stands up in Utah, in speaking to the Mormon people, and says. "The church is the same for all time; I am proud of this church."

To-day, Mr. President, he is one of the chief officials of that church. The evidence shows here that the church sent him to the Senate. It shows much more, which I will not repeat or go over, that when another Morman who sought to come to the Senate and failed to get the permission of the church they not only defeated him, but excommunicated him, and in the language of one of the witnesses "they brought him to his knees and to an abject apology."

This church has always claimed, and it is claimed forever, that what they call their revelation is authority far above every law.

I say, Mr. President, with no feeling against the Senator himself and not through malice on account of the horrible murder, only a part of the details of which I have recited, but because I believe a church that inculcates doctrines that the leaders of that church can dictate absolutely not only in spiritual, but in temporal matters, a church that teaches that it gets its authority directly from God and overrides all human authority, ought not to be permitted to dictate who shall come to this Senate, and when they select as their candidates and put forth one of the leaders, one of the apostles, who says himself that he may receive these same revelations, I say that I believe it is the duty of the Senate to say that he is not qualified to sit as a member of this body.

Senators, in reading the account of the execution of John D. Lee, after judgment was rendered against him in the court, you will find that he was taken back to Mountain Meadows on the very spot where this horrible crime was committed. He was executed by shooting, for such at that time was the Utah law. The man who described the shooting at that execution and his death says that Lee, having perpetrated that deed, having been guilty of treachery in inducing those people to surrender; the man who murdered men, women, and children contended that he had done no wrong; that he felt sure that he was a saint of the Lord; that he had simply obeyed orders from the church officials and that they, and not he, were responsible if there was any wrong to it. He said in another place that if he failed to obey the leaders of the church his soul would be damned forever.

He died, Mr. President, expressing no regret, but saying that he was going straight home to heaven. The man who wrote the account of it in describing it said that in 1857 the land in Mountain Meadows was covered with luxuriant grass and beautiful flowers, that a spring ran through it, and it was the brightest spot in all the West; that when John D. Lee died on the same spot, in 1877, the spring had dried up, it was a barren and desolate waste, and the curse of God had fallen upon this spot where the inhuman crime was committed.

Now, Mr. President, repeating once again that if I know myself I am not moved by any desire for vengeance on Reed Smoot because of the action of this church. I felt it was my duty to the memory of the men who fell and who lived near my home and who have been since slandered in every conceivable way by the Mormons about their acts prior to the killing in order to try to justify the deed. I felt that I owed it to their relatives and to their friends, many of whom are living to-day, that these facts should go into the RECORD.

I do not know what the Senate will decide. Senators, it is for you to determine. As I look upon it, the vote on the 20th of this month is the most important of any that has been taken

In my judgment, the vote that is taken then will be far-reaching in its consequences. If, in view of all the facts that have been produced before the committee, in view of the re-port of the majority of the committee, headed by the distin-guished Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows], you think it is your duty to say that Reed Smoot is fully qualified to be a Senator, if you say that you think he should retain his seat, you give an encouragement and impetus to polygamy and polygamous practices in this country that will be far-reaching in its consequences. President Smith can still boast that he sacrificed nothing; that he told the Senate of the United States he was violating the law. He told them that he did not regard the manifesto of Woodruff. He told them, in effect, that he would take his chances on the law and obey what he considered the demand of God Almighty communicated to him. He then can boast that he is approved, that his action is indorsed, that the saints of Utah can look to him, and that the Lord, through him, has come to their relief and has indorsed the doctrines which they have always taught.

If, on the other hand, a majority of the Senate shall vote that no man representing a church of that character ought to sit in this Chamber, then in 10,000 homes in every State in this Union the mothers and wives and daughters will gather around the fireside and thank God that the Senate of the United States has put its everlasting seal of condemnation not only upon polygamy, but upon every organization that seeks to set itself up above the Constitution of the United States and the laws which we have all sworn to obey.

ISSUANCE OF LAND PATENTS.

During the delivery of Mr. Berry's speech,
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. Table Calendar 26, Senate resolution 214, by Mr. CARTER.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

After the conclusion of Mr. Berry's speech,

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 22580) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department. for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on behalf of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. Clapp, Mr. McCumber, and Mr. Dubois as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SNAKE RIVER (WASHINGTON) DAM.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 24928) authorizing the construction of a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington, by the Benton Water Company, returned by the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the votes by which the bill just returned from the House was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered. The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

JOSEPH P. W. R. ROSS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3593) granting an honorable discharge to Joseph P. W. R. Ross; which was, in line 7, after "Maryland," to insert:

Provided. That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. RAYNER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

RIGHTS OF INTERMARRIED CITIZENS OF CHEROKEE NATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

read and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The Supreme Court of the United States, in its decision of November 5, 1906, in the case of Daniel Red Bird, the Cherokee Nation, et al. v. The United States, held that "the rights and privileges of those white citizens who intermarried with Cherokee citizens subsequent to the 1st day of November, 1875, do not extend to the right of soil or intermarried persons are not entitled to share in the allotment of the lands or in the distribution of any of the funds belonging to said nation, and are not entitled to be enrolled for such purpose; that those white persons who intermarried with Delaware or Shawnee citizens of the Cherokee Nation either prior or subsequent to November 1, 1875, and those who intermarried with Cherokees by blood and subsequently, being left a widow or widower by the death of the Cherokee wife or husband, intermarried with persons not of Cherokee blood, and those white men who, having married Cherokee women and subsequently abandoned their Cherokee wives, have no part or share in the Cherokee property, and are not entitled to participate in the allotment of the lands or in the distribution of the funds of the Cherokee Nation or people, and are not entitled to be enrolled for such purpose."

I invite your attention to the urgent necessity for legislation for the relief of intermarried citizens of the Cherokee Nation adversely affected by such decision, many of whom have made permanent and valuable improvements upon lands of the nation, where they have resided, for many years, undisturbed in their possession, under the belief that they were entitled to the same rights in the lands as native-born citizens of such nation.

In the decision of the court it was stated that, as to the improvements upon lands of the nation, where they have resided for many years, undisturbed in their possession, under the belief that they were entitled to the same rights in the lands as native-

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the bill (S. 8365) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cancel certain Indian allotments and substitute therefor smaller allotments of irrigable land, and providing for compensatory payments to the irrigation fund on lands so allotted within the Truckee-Carson irrigation project, be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senate to resume the consideration of House bill 23551,

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 23551) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs on page 39 as amended.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator rises for some purpose connected with the bill?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; for some purpose connected with the bill. An engagement requires me to retire from the Chamber presently, and I ask the Senator to yield to me for a moment to make a statement.

ake a statement.

I doubt not the amendment I propose might be subject to a sint of order, if the point of order is raised. The amendment point of order, if the point of order is raised. The amendment authorizes the President to appoint William H. Crook on the retired list as a major in the Army. I think every Senator present knows Mr. Crook. For the last forty-two years he has been the confidential clerk of the various Presidents of the United States who have occupied the office. Prior to that time he was a private soldier during the war between the States.

The proposed amendment is explanatory of the facts I have suggested, and I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment inserted at the close of the bill for the consideration of the committee of conference, if after full investigation it shall be determined to be worthy poses an amendment, which will be read.

Mr. SCOTT. As I understand the Senator, he wants to have it considered at the close of the bill, and he is offering it now.

Mr. CARTER. No; I ask that it be inserted at the close of the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope the Senator will let it go over until we get further along with the bill.

Mr. CARTER. I only offer the amendment now because I am compelled to leave the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to having the proposed amendment stated?

Mr. WARREN. I understand the Senator offers it to come in at the end of the bill, so far as its position is concerned, and asks now unanimous consent for its adoption. Am I right? Mr. CARTER. That is a correct statement of the case

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint William H. Crook, who served as a private under the President's first call for troops in 1861 and subsequently as an employee and clerk in the office of the President for over forty-two continuous years, a major in the Utited States Army and place him on the retired list thereof, with retired pay of said rank, the retired list being increased for that purpose only. pose only amendment just stated.

Mr. SPOONER. I think there is nothing in it about "the war between the States."

Mr. CARTER. Not in the amendment. Mr. SPOONER. But only in the Senator's speech?

Mr. CARTER. That was in the speech of the Senator from Montana only.

The amendment was agreed to.

CUMBERLAND RIVER BRIDGES NEAR NASHVILLE, TENN.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for a moment?

What is the object the Senator has in view?

I want at this time to ask unanimous con-Mr. WARREN. Mr. CARMACK. sent for the consideration of a small bridge bill. It is important that it should be passed at an early date, and it will lead to no discussion.

Mr. WARREN. Under the circumstances I will yield to the Senator on his statement that it is a very small bill, providing it leads to no discussion whatever.

Mr. CARMACK. I am sure it will not. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8274) to amend an act to authorize the construction of two bridges across the Cumberland River at or near Nashville, Tenn.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported whole proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 5, after the name "Tennessee," to insert "approved April 24, 1906;" in line 6, after the word "for," to insert "commencing;" and in line 7, after the word "bridges," to strike out "until three years from the passage of this act" and insert "one year, and for completing the same three years, from April 24, 1907;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc. That an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of two bridges across the Cumberland River at or near Nashville, Tenn," approved April 24, 1906, be so amended as to extend the time for commencing the construction of said bridges one year, and for completing the same three years, from April 24, 1907.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERMS OF COURTS AT BELLINGHAM, WASH.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WARREN. I will if the subject which the Senator desires considered leads to no debate.

Mr. SPOONER. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21383) providing terms of the circuit court of the United States for the western district and of the district court of the United States for the northern division of the western district of the State of Washington be held at Bellingham, to report it with an amendment. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary was to strike out sections 3 and 4, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the terms of said courts shall not be limited to any particular number of days nor shall it be necessary to adjourn by reason of the intervention of a term elsewhere, but the court intervening may be adjourned until the business of the court in session is concluded.

SEC. 4. That the city of Bellingham shall furnish a sultable room in which to hold said court, and light and heat the same without any expense to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CHATTAHOOCHEE RIVER BRIDGE, GEORGIA.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WARREN. For what purpose?

Mr. CLAY. I have a very short bill, which can not lead to any discussion, which has been reported from the Committee on Commerce

Mr. WARREN. I shall be glad to yield if the bill will cause no debate, but I hope there will be no further appeals for the consideration of bills until the Army appropriation bill shall be completed.

Mr. CLAY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25043) to authorize the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Chattahoochee River, in the State of Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Nelson in the chair). The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The bill was read; and by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I now ask that the consideration of the Army appropriation bill may be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 23551) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908. Mr. HALE. Mr. President ming yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. WARREN. I do, if the Senator rises to the pending bill. Mr. HALE. Yes; I rise to the pending bill. I ask the Senate to return to the amendment on page 34, from line 12 to line 15, inclusive. At my suggestion on Saturday that part was struck out by agreement of Scnators interested, including the chairman of the committee. On examination I find that the item has been regularly estimated for. It is not, therefore, subject to a point of order. I ask that the vote by which it was rejected be reconsidered, and that the amendment be adopted. I should like to have the assurance of the chairman of the committee that he will not take this as a precedent for putting such things upon the Army bill rather than upon the sundry civil bill.

Mr. WARREN. I appreciate the suggestion made by the Senator from Maine in regard to this matter. I do not quite know whether there is a rule of the Senate which provides for discrimination between different bills. I think not, unless it be some unwritten rule. But I am glad, and ready always, to recognize the wisdom of having proper matters under proper headings and in the proper bills.

I want to say in this connection that the committee hoped to have early action in placing the item in this bill, and I am very much gratified that the Senator from Maine wishes to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the vote by which the Senate rejected the amendment may be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves that the vote by which the paragraph on page 34, from line 12 to line 15, inclusive, was rejected, be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now let the amendment be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment.

I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read. The Secretary. On page 34, after line 11, the Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment to insert:

For the acquisition of not exceeding 50 acres of land near or adjoining Fort Taylor, at Key West, Fla., $150,000, or so much thereof as the Secretary of War may deem necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President. I believe when we discontinued the consideration of the bill on Saturday last we were on page 39, the clause from line 10 to line 19.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to ask what has become of the point of order that the item as reported is general legislation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the point of order was reserved until the amendment could be perfected.

Mr. WARREN. I see there are quite a number who are desirous of making the point of order against the amendment, and I am not going to prolong the discussion, so far as I am concerned, but if I may have a moment I desire to say

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not find it necessary to make the point of order, as it has already been made. I was inquiring what had become of it.

Mr. WARREN. The point of order has been made. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the point of order has been made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] and reserved.

Mr. WARREN. I have only to say that in all this discussion I have not changed my opinion, but still think that this was a proper matter for the committee to bring before this body, and that it is in the interest of economy and good government. I will confess that I was not so strenuously in love with the rate bill, or the necessity for it, as were a great many others, but, on the other hand, I was ready to bow to the will of Congress and to have the law, until changed, applied and obeyed; but I do not think that that law is one of perfection or divinity. I do not think it is an idol that we must bow to and worship, and never attempt to correct. I think we shall find, as time progresses, that there are a great many corrections necessary. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this amendment was to carry out what was really the spirit of that law, namely, the equalization of rates. Unfortunately, instead of equalizing them, in this case it has caused just the opposite effect. Furthermore, it was in the line of economy. the view of the committee.

Of course, I shall make no comment upon the point of order, whether it is right or wrong. The Chair will decide that. But I want the Senate to know that, in my judgment, there will be a larger transportation appropriation asked for next year if this proposition goes out on a point of order than if the provision remains in the bill. Having said that much, and with probable larger appropriations in the minds of the Senate for next year, I wish to be permitted to vote upon it; but, of course, it comes directly upon a parliamentary basis if the point of order is insisted upon, and we shall have to accept it in that

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President-

Mr. WARREN. One moment please. Of course I accuse no man of being a czar. When a point of order is interposed against an amendment it is because the Senator making it knows it is necessary in the consideration of great appropriation bills that they should be guarded.

I have an item from a newspaper here, which I ask to have read. It relates to the matter of transportation for the Gov-I ask to have it read simply to show that the Government. ernment is doing the best it can under the rate law to save money to the people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNCLE SAM BEATS BAILBOADS—WAR DEPARTMENT WILL WAIT AND SHIP SOLDIERS BY COLONISTS' RATES.

OMAHA, NEBR., February 8.

OMAHA, NEBR., February 8.

The War Department has found a way to get even with the Union Pacific and the Northwestern railroads for refusing to haul the Tenth Cavalry from Nebraska forts to San Francisco at lower than tariff rates. Although the soldiers were scheduled to start on February 26, to-day orders were issued to hold the men until March 1, when colonists rates will be put in effect on all western railroads, and the soldiers will be hauled at half the regular fare plus $2.

This is a lower rate than the Quartermaster's Department expected to procure from the railroads on a regular bid.

Mr. CULLRERSON Mr. President I only rose for the results.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I only rose for the purpose of suggesting, in reply to the Senator from Wyoming, that he will recall that this proposed amendment by his acquiescence has been very greatly enlarged—that is, the exemptions have been very greatly increased over those in the original bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that it has been both restricted and extended. It has been restricted by cutting out free passes, and it has been extended by having it apply to the Army and Navy and the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. CULBERSON. I recall distinctly that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon], which includes in the provision the families of Army officers and enlisted men, greatly enlarging the list of those who may receive reduced rates, at least; and another one suggested, as I recall, by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn], were ac-Therefore if a Senator were not previously inclined to make a point of order against this amendment, there would be room to do so now, and there would be that in the provision as it stands to suggest to him to do so, put there by the acquiescence of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have not acquiesced in the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho, because there has been no opportunity. It was during the time he was offering his amendment that this discussion went off into broad waters; so that, as I understand it, his amendment was not adopted or accepted, and in fact no action was had on it at all,

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator accepted the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, as I understand.

Mr. WARREN. What amendment was that?

Mr. CULBERSON. The amendment including the families of officers and enlisted men.

Mr. WARREN. That, I will say, was intended to be covered originally. I was very glad to accept that amendment. I wished it to be a part of the provision if we passed it.

Mr. FULTON obtained the floor.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator from Oregon will yield to me a moment, I should like to say

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FULTON. Yes.
Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to say, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson], that the amendment which I offered and to which he referred is now pending and is the pending amendment. The discussion that has taken so wide a scope led off from the consideration of the amendment which I offered.

Mr. WARREN. I am right, then, am I not, that it was open when the discussion commenced?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I have doubted very seriously the propriety of extending either free transportation or reduced rates to officers when not traveling on duty or to the families of the officers at any time.

Mr. SPOONER. It covers the men, too.
Mr. FULTON. Certainly; it applies to enlisted men as well. When traveling on duty they are paid their expenses. not traveling on duty or under orders, while I admit that there are many strong arguments that would favor making a distinction between them and other citizens, it seems to me that, after all, it is of doubtful propriety. But I do not propose to discuss

I only wish to say that I hope no Senator will insist on a point of order against this entire proposed amendment, for I think it is one of very great value and importance to the Government.

I asked the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] on Saturday, when this matter was up for discussion, if he did not think there was a marked distinction between granting a preferential rate to the Government and granting it to a private individual? I suggested, furthermore, that where it is granted to the Government, it is granted to the people, the Government being simply the representative or the agent of the people. The Senator responded that that might be true if, as a matter of fact, all the people were equally engaged in patronizing the railroads, but his contention was-

Mr. SPOONER. They are all under the Government, as the Senator from Wisconsin says. But the contention of the Senator from North Dakota was that because all of them do not patronize the railroads equally, believing, as he did, that any railroad would have to make up the loss that is sustained by reason of the lower rate to the Government, the few who do patronize the railroads would have to make up that loss.

The contention, Mr. President, is, it seems to me, fallacious, because of the assumption, in the first place, that the railroad is going to carry the Government freight or the officers and men of the Army at a loss. The amendment does not contemplate anything of that character. The amendment simply allows the railroads to give a reduced rate to the Government. It does not contemplate that it is going to give them a rate by which the railroads will carry at a loss, and I do not imagine that it is to be presumed that the railroads will give any such rate. We all know very well that in carrying for the Government, where the railroads take train loads from the initial point through to the point of delivery, they can carry at much lower rates than they can where they are distributing the passengers or the freight along the line at different points.

I do not suppose that anyone has every questioned that there were some elements of honesty and good business sense in the practice that has been followed by the railroads in the past of giving large shippers preferential rates. I do not doubt that a railroad company can well afford to carry the Standard Oil Company's business, for instance, at less rates, and make money, than it can carry the freight of smaller shippers. But experience shows that when you permit the granting of preferential rates to private individuals the abuses are so numerous that the result is the public is ultimately the sufferer, and a wise public policy has, on consideration, suggested the importance and the necessity of denying the right to give preferential rates to individual shippers at all. Hence this provision of the rate law.

But the arguments and reasons that induced Congress to enact that character of legislation have no force whatever when you are speaking of giving preferential rates to the Government. The Government is not a competitor. The Government is not competing with any private individual. The Government is not shipping its stores and its supplies for the purpose of sale. It is shipping them for its own use. Consequently it enters into competition with no person. No person is injured by reason of its getting or receiving a preferential rate. On the other hand, every dollar that is saved to the Government by that is saved to the people.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator. Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon, do I understand that the Senator is referring now only to the transportation of property of the Government and is not discussing the proposed amendments that include the carrying of individuals or the families of officers or men?

Mr. FULTON. No. I said in the beginning that I did not care to discuss them. While I doubt somewhat the propriety of adopting them, I do not care to oppose them or to antagonize I think the important proposition is that the Government shall be allowed to accept or secure preferential or reduced rates from the railroad companies.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask another question at that point, with the permission of the Senator. Does not the Senator think now that the Government itself in transporting its property, which is at the expense of the General Treasury, is exempt from the operation of the interstate-commerce law?

Mr. FULTON. That may be. I have not given that question sufficient consideration to have a definite opinion; but even if that be true there can be no objection to making it clear and definite. I can not understand what possible objection there can be to allowing the Government to accept from the other railroad companies of this country the same rate that is accepted now from the fifty-six land-grant railroads, namely, 50 per cent of the regular tariff. Now, I hope

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Dakota?
Mr. McCUMBER. I will wait until the Senator is through.

I thought he had concluded.

Mr. FULTON. I am practically through. I was simply going to say that I hoped no one would insist upon a point of order against this amendment. Of course, it is said by some that this is the entering wedge that will ultimately destroy the principle of the rate law. Well, that depends very much upon who is behind the wedge. I do not think that a wedge that is thrust into that law simply to trim down the objectionable features of it, a wedge that is driven by the friends of the measure, threatens any danger to the rate law. Everybody knew when the rate law was enacted that experience would discover some objectionable features. If that were not true, it would be a very extraordinary thing in the enactment of legislation of such importance. This is one defect that expe-rience has discovered, namely, that we have denied the Government the right to accept rates at less than the scheduled tariff. I think it is greatly to the interest of the Government that this amendment should be adopted, and I trust no point of order will be insisted on against it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr President, the Senator asks that no point of order be insisted on so far as the amendment relates to Government property. That is my understanding. The Senator says that he can not understand how there can be any loss to be made up by the other shippers if the railroad, in carrying for half price, does not carry at an absolute loss.

Mr. President, I have the right to assume, in the first place, that the railroads only carry passengers and goods for a fair and reasonable remuneration. If the law which we passed last winter is enforced at all, no railway to-day is receiving exorbitant prices, and if it can afford to carry the property of the Government for 50 per cent less than the rate at which it carries the property of private individuals, then it is charging an exorbitant price for carrying the property of the individual.

Mr. FULTON. Does not the Senator recognize the fact that when a common carrier takes the freight of the Government, amounting to a train load, as it usually does, in moving troops at least, carrying them from one point directly over its lines through to the point of discharge, not being required to stop at way stations to take on other passengers or to let off other passengers, or to take on or let off freight, it can afford to do that transportation at less than it can other transportation where it has to stop, to carry a large train crew, and to incur all the expenses that the Senator will understand are incident to it? If that is true, why not let the Government take advantage of it?

Mr. McCUMBER. The trouble is, it is not wholly true. The railroads can carry a carload of freight from New York to San Francisco just as cheaply for me as they can for the Govern-They can transport a train of cars just as cheaply for the private individual as for the Government.

Certainly they can. Mr. FULTON.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am placing my argument upon the basis of a like charge for a like character of service.

Mr. FULTON. But if the Senator will allow me-

Mr. McCUMBER. That should be the basis throughout all this controversy

Mr. FULTON. The Senator understands, however, whereas it is true that the carrier can carry a train load through for him just as cheaply as it can for the Government, there are objections to allowing preferential rates to be given to an individual, to a competitor with others engaged in business, which objections do not exist as to the Government. Does not the Senator recognize that?

Mr. McCUMBER. To a very limited extent, possibly.
Mr. FULTON. Where you carry for the Government you carry for the whole people. The Government is not in competition with anybody. But where you carry for a private individual you carry for one who is in competition with others, and you give him an opportunity to create a monopoly at the

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us see whether or not the Government is in competition. We will assume that the regular rate for Let us see whether or not the Government carrying a given amount of goods from New York to San Francisco is $100,000. We will assume that that hundred thousand dollars is the reasonable compensation to the railways. railways carry that freight for the Government for $50,000, then the railways have lost in profits $50,000. If they have lost $50,000 in profits—I do not care whether they could have carried the freight for nothing at all or not—and if they are not receiving any more profit than they ought to make from their other business, then they have to make up the difference, $50,000, not necessarily from the whole public, but from the balance of the shippers who are shipping goods over the same

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator stop for a moment and think of this? There are fifty-six railroad companies, several of them transcontinental lines, which are already carrying for the Government and are required to carry for the Government at 50 per cent of the regular rate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that; but they are doing so for a valuable consideration. We have paid the other 50 per

Mr. FULTON. We will say it is for a valuable considera-tion; but they are doing it. The other roads can not do it under the present law, and therefore they will not do it, and they will get none of the business. But if we adopt this amendment we allow them to get business which they otherwise could not get. If we give them new business, even if they make only a small profit out of it, are we working any hardship They get something they never had before.

Mr. McCUMBER. You are working a hardship upon the other shippers. The Senator can not argue out of existence the fact that every loss has to be paid by some one. It has to be borne, if not directly then indirectly, by some one else.

Mr. FULTON. They are not doing the business at all now. Mr. McCUMBER. Those roads which the Senator says are carrying for 50 per cent have already received the other 50 per cent. They have already received it in something, which I assume, was the equivalent, and I believe was many times more than the equivalent, to the difference of 50 per cent.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. These other roads are not now doing this business at all. The land-grant roads are required to do it for 50 per cent of the regular tariff rate. Hence these other roads can not get it. That is, where they are parallel or anywhere near parallel to the land-grant roads.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well.
Mr. FULTON. If we allow them to do the business, the Senator surely will not contend that they will be doing it at a loss and, therefore, their patrons will have to make it up in some

Mr. McCUMBER. That argument does not appeal to me in the slightest degree. If the Government has already paid to certain roads one half of the transportation charges in a consideration which it has given to those roads, then let it use the road that gives the service for the other half. If it has already paid half to one road, there is no reason in the world why it should ship over a different road if this road can give exactly the same service and the service that is demanded.

Outside of that proposition-and I say that is sufficient at least to justify me in holding to this point of order—there is the other proposition, and that is that the families of officers of the Army shall have free transportation over all the lines in the United States, not limited to bringing their families where the officers are compelled to serve, but without limitation to travel anywhere over any line at any time. If it is proper that when a soldier goes from one point to another his family should be taken with him, I have not the slightest objection in the world to appropriating enough to pay the transportation of his family. I have not any objection, if it is a proper thing for the soldier to take his family to the post where he is to serve, to the Government paying for moving the family there, if it can be shown to be for the best interest of the service.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator permit me to call his attention to the fact that the word "free" has been stricken out? There is no provision now in the bill for free transportation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us suppose it is reduced transporta-Reduced transportation may mean one-tenth or threefourths or any proportion of the regular fare. It is an advantage. It is a special advantage. There is no reason in the world why the major-general, living in the city of Washington, in service here, should get transportation for his family, who want to go to San Francisco, for one-tenth the regular fare any more than there is why the Senator from Wisconsin should receive the same courtesy. There is no reason, in my opinion, why we should make a difference between one class of American citizens and another class of American citizens. practically what this provision means.

I am willing to pay proper salaries; I am willing to pay for transporting families if it is the proper thing to transport families; but I am not willing to make an official position the basis for making a distinction between the ordinary rights of American citizenship, and I think I am justified in drawing the line there. For that reason alone I should object to that portion of the amendment.

Mr. President, there is another portion of the amendment which the Senator from Wyoming has called to my attention, commencing with the word "Provided," in line 19, and going to the end of the amendment. That is something I know nothing about. It is not really a part of this other amendment. It might as well be put-

It has no connection with it. Mr. LODGE.

Mr. McCUMBER. It has no connection whatever with the other portion. It could just as well be placed in any other part of the bill, although it commences with "Provided."

Mr. WARREN. Both of them are provisos of the main proposition and both are apropos. The point of order can be made against the first proviso down to a certain line and the other proviso can be left in the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is what I was going to say. Without knowing the necessity for the latter proviso, although I admit it is subject to the some point of order, I wish to limit my point of order to that portion of the amendment commencing in line 10 and ending with the word "rates," in line 19.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like the privilege of interrupting the Senator from North Dakota for a question,

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield. Mr. HEYBURN. Under the interstate-commerce act the parties who are bound by its provisions are:

Any person, corporation, or company.

Those are the terms used in each instance. Does the Senator believe that those terms include the Government of the United States and that the Government within those terms is prohibited from making a contract that carries with it a rebate?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I do not think so.
Mr. HEYBURN. Then, if that is true, there is no necessity for any part of this amendment, because the amendment seeks only to except the United States Government from the operation of the interstate-commerce act when, as the Senator suggests and as I believe, the Government of the United States is not included within the force or effect of those words-" any person, corporation, or company.'

Mr. BACON. As the Senator from North Dakota has indicated that he agrees with that view as to what constitutes a proper construction of the rate law, I should like to ask him if he does not think, whether the letter of the law binds the Government or does not bind it, that the Government is bound morally by the spirit of that law to observe its terms?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is just what I was going to say. believe that the same rule should apply to the Government that applies to all of the citizens, that the Government ought not to ask for special privileges from any railway company when it declares that special privileges shall not be given to private parties. I believe that the same rule should apply in one instance as in the other.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield. Mr. HEYBURN. I rise merely to make a suggestion. If it was intended that the Government should be placed upon the same footing as persons, corporations, or companies, would it not have been entirely proper for Congress to have said so in enacting the interstate-commerce law, and should we enlarge that law by implication which itself as yet is a very new provision of law and somewhat of an experiment?

Mr. McCUMBER. We will not enlarge it by implication if we cut this out. The law will stand as it is to-day. I have no doubt myself that if the Government should ask and receive special privileges from the railways in the moving of Government property, it would not be amenable to this law as I now remember it. But I believe that it ought not to ask it. I believe whenever the Government gets an advantage in any way from the railroad companies, some one has to pay for it, and those must pay for it who are paying for like service, because by reason of the Government paying a less compensation the private individual must pay a greater compensation.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do. Mr. HEYBURN. I would suggest, then, that the subject under discussion should be an amendment providing that the Government should be included instead of that it should not be included, inasmuch as the Senator, I understand, agrees with the suggestion that the Government now is not included within the language of the interstate-commerce act, and that it can only be included by a construction based not upon the statute or its language, but upon what the Senator is pleased to term the "justice of the situation," and that if the amendment under discussion were attempting to enlarge the scope of the interstatecommerce act then it would be subject to the point of order. It is subject to a point of order now merely because it is a useless declaration of a thing that already exists.

Mr. McCUMBER. So far as that part of it is concerned-

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.
Mr. McCUMBER. That part relating to the proposition that the old act shall not be considered so and so. That is true as t relates to that, but the other portions are objectionable upon

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have very great doubt whether the premise upon which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] based his argument is sound, and it is important for a moment to consider it. I do not know upon what theory, from the standpoint of logic, it can be contended that under the interstate-commerce law, or any other law of the kind, the Government in its operations, unless it is expressly included, is to be placed upon the same basis as the citizen. There is nothing invidious about that. The Senator from North Dakota speaks of "privileges" and "special privileges" and all that. I do not understand that it is appropriate—I use that word in the logical sense, not to criticise the Senator for its word in the logical sense, not to criticise the senator for its use—to speak of privileges conferred by Congress upon the Government in contradistinction to the citizens of the Government The Government has never been treated in its operations upon the same basis in law as the citizen.

The States and the Government of the United States enact statutes of limitation which bind the citizen, but which do not bind the Government unless the act includes the Government. The Government enacts statutes under which suits may be brought by one citizen against another, in this court or in that court; but the Government can not be sued at all under any provision of law general in its terms and applicable to citizens unless expressly therein the Government consents to be sued.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to make a suggestion in the nature of an inquiry. Then is it not true that as the law stands it is unnecessary to make any further provision—

Mr. SPOONER. I was coming to that.
Mr. HEYBURN. In order to allow the Government to make any contract it pleases in regard to transportation over inter-

Mr. SPOONER. No; the Government may not make any contract it chooses

Mr. HEYBURN. For its own use and purposes.

Mr. SPOONER. Because the Government is composed of an executive department, a judicial department, and a legislative department, each having its appropriate functions, and what the law shall be, so far as concerns authority to the executive department outside of the Constitution, is to be determined by the legislative department. The Congress may provide that the Government shall transport troops and munitions of war, paying therefor the same rates that are exacted under the authority of law by the railway carriers from individual shippers.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—
Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, but I doubt very much—it is only my doubt—whether the in-terstate-commerce law, passed to secure equality among the citizens of the United States as to the transportation of passengers, and among the shippers of the United States as to the transportation of merchandise, or, using a generic term, freight, includes the Government of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would inquire of the Senator, in the nature of a suggestion, whether it is not true that the interstatecommerce law, as we have it under consideration, left the Government in exactly the same position that it was under the pre-existing law?

Mr. SPOONER. That is the point which I was approaching, as my friend the Senator from Idaho must see. But I do not know that. Neither does the Senator. It is not a question just now what construction would be placed by the court upon the interstate-commerce law, but it is a question what is the sound public policy in relation to the transportation by the Government of troops and munitions of war; whether the Government is to be placed upon the same basis (transacting only the business of the people at the expense of the people) as the shippers of the United States transacting private business for their own profit.

Now, if there is any doubt about that in the interstate-commerce law and I am right in my view of public policy, it ought to be eliminated, and so far only as the military operations of the Government of the United States are concerned, the amendment ought to be regarded by unanimous consent, in my judgment only, as germane to this bill. Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. TILLMAN. Do I understand the Senator to contend that the Congress, in good morals, has the right and power to pass a law governing the transactions of shippers with the railroads, and compelling the railroads to treat all shippers alike. without discrimination, and then itself claim the right to have the railroads discriminate in its favor?

Mr. SPOONER. Probably my notion about morals is not as sensitive as that of my friend, if he will permit me to refer to him.

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly. Mr. SPOONER. But I have not the slightest doubt about it that it is no question of morals-none at all. Whose Government is this?

Mr. TILLMAN. It is the Government of the people, we hope, although it does not seem to be run altogether in that interest

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, well, that is the Senator's notion. retically it is the Government of the people, and if it is not practically the Government of the people that is the fault of those whom the people chose to transact the people's business Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. SPOONER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to let the Senator finish that eloquent observation of his.

Mr. SPOONER. I have finished that "eloquent observation." Mr. TILLMAN. Where does the Senator get the idea that this great Government, the most wealthy in the world, we think, the most powerful in the world, should have the right to compel all of its citizens to obey a law in regard to the transaction of business, and then should get on its knees and go around and play the poor man and beg for special favors?

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, Mr. President, the Government is not some far-away, fanciful thing, apart from the people. It is a mere agency created by the people.

Mr. TILLMAN. We do not treat the mails in that way. We hire the railroads to haul the mail every year.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. And there is a debate on at the other end of the Capitol as to whether the Government shall reduce the rates of pay provided by law for compensation to the railroads.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, when we come to the transportation of articles of war or munitions or soldiers, what is the difference? In what way does the Government differ from the private individual in this transaction any more than it does in the transportation of the mails?

Mr. SPOONER. In every way, Mr. President.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like for the Senator to point it out. Mr. SPOONER. I may not be able to point it out so that the Senator will agree to it. Probably not. I only speak of what seems to me to be the truth. I may be all wrong. But, Mr. President, when the Government, in the transaction of its business, avails itself of private instrumentalities—the use of private property, services rendered by the owners of that private propfair compensation for the service which it receives, just as the Government, when it condemns your land or mine-and no matter how dear it is to us, no matter if we would not sell it to anyone else on earth, we must yield it to the Government-takes it at a just compensation, fixed according to Mr. TILLMAN. By a jury of citizens.

Mr. SPOONER. Fixed according to law. The Senator says by a jury of citizens. This is a Government of citizens. is no function of this Government which is not rendered as the agency of citizens and for the benefit of citizens. Talk about the wealth of the United States; it is the wealth of the States. Talk about the commerce of the United States; it is the commerce of the States. What is the commerce of the United States, disregarding the States, which are the constituent elements of the Government?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Might it not be true that it is the commerce of the people; not the commerce of the States?

Mr. SPOONER. That is a distinction without a difference, in my opinion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE rose.

Mr. SPOONER. I yield to the Senator. Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I have asked my question. I want to ask the Senator another when the Senator answers it.

Mr. SPOONER. I will answer it. I can answer two at a

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not want to give the Senator two at a time.

Mr. SPOONER. I prefer that he should.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I prefer that the Senator should answer my question, and then I will ask him another.

Mr. SPOONER. I will take it in installments if it pleases the Senator better. The governments of the States are created by the people of the States. They are merely governmental The governments of the States are created agencies of the people of the States, in the last analysis, both the government of the States and the Government of the United It is the government of the people of the States and the people of the United States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. My question of the Senator—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator will pardon me-after he had said that the commerce of the country was the commerce of the States, my question was whether, as a matter of fact, it might not be said the commerce of the people. A State ships The people ship everything.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, that is axiomatic.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, if that is axiomatic—

Mr. SPOONER. If there were no people in a State there would not be any State, and if there were no people in a State there could not be much commerce. The State government, like the Government of the United States, is a mere instrumentality of the people. When I speak of the commerce of the State I speak of the commerce of the people of the State.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; that is not the question. As the Senator said very directly and clearly and politely, in answer to my question, whether all that might not be said to be commerce not of the State, but of the people of the United States he answered that that was axiomatic. It answers my question fully.

Mr. SPOONER. I am glad to have one question put to me by the Senator from Indiana answered fully.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am glad, too.
Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is entitled to his joy. I have always done it.

Mr. President, it would be a waste of time to draw a distinction between the people of a State and the State. What constitutes a State? I will not quote the ode. It is the people. What constitutes the Government of the United States? It is the State governments, created by the people.

When I read a speech not long ago which challenged the exercise by the States of their reserved powers and spoke about the commerce of "the United States," and how it had grown and was monitory to the States as to the manner in which they should exercise their reserved powers, it quickly came to my mind that there was no commerce, and is not much, if any, really, of the United States, but it is the commerce of the people of the States

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SPOONER. I do. Mr. ALDRICH. I have been unfortunate enough not to hear all of the Senator's argument, but I understand-

Mr. SPOONER. I congratulate the Senator. Mr. ALDRICH. I understand he takes the position that in treating munitions of war and the transportation of munitions of war-

Mr. SPOONER. Troops.
Mr. ALDRICH. Troops and munitions of war, we should take a different position than that taken in regard to other business transactions.

Mr. SPOONER. I do. I did not say of the Government, I said the people.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am talking about the Government, because the Government in the first place deals with this question.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not talking about the Government, but as to the effect on the people eventually. The Senator and I perhaps might not agree.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think we would. I am speaking of a transaction primarily with the Government, and the Senator says that the Government itself must treat or ought to treat the transportation of munitions and of soldiers differently from transportations or large business transactions?

Mr. SPOONER. I think Congress in legislating for the Government and the people may with perfect propriety and mo-rality treat the operations of the Government upon a different basis so far as transportation is concerned, and on different principles from that with which they treat shipments and transportation of the people, and the products of the labor of the people.

Mr. ALDRICH rose.

Mr. SPOONER. No; if the Senator will allow me a moment, he separates the Government from the people in a manner which to my mind is without justification. In this connection, what is the Government? Will the Senator from Rhode Island say that the Government is to be dissociated from the people? Is it not a mere agency of the people, of the States, which is the same thing in the sense in which I am using it, for governmental purposes.

Why, Mr. President, whose Army is this? The Senator niles. Is it the Army of an artificial entity remote from the people, to be differentiated from the people in the sense in which the Senator seeks to do it?

For what purpose is the Army to be used, Mr. President? It is to be used for the protection of the people. Why are the mails carried? They are carried not for the benefit of the Government, but for the benefit of the people. Why are troops transported from station to station? For the benefit not of this mere governmental entity, but of the people whose agency and instrumentality it is. Now I will listen to the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator, to use a concrete illustration, think that if the Government of the United States were shipping a hundred tons of steel, say, from Pittsburg to the

New York Navy-Yard, it ought to pay a different rate of transportation from what a shipbuilding company situated in New York would pay for the transportation of the same quantity of steel from Pittsburg to New York?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. It ought to pay a different rate?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; and it is not immoral and not against public policy.

Mr. ALDRICH. I imagine it is not a question of morals. do not understand that any of this controversy is over a question of morals.

Mr. SPOONER. What is it?
Mr. ALDRICH. It is a question as to whether the Government should adhere to a principle.

Mr. SPOONER. That begs the question. What is the principle.

Mr. ALDRICH. The principle is equal treatment before the law of every individual, of every corporation, and that the Government on the part of Congress should be treated exactly as it treats its citizens.

Mr. SPOONER. That is treating the Government as an individual, as a citizen. It is fundamental that the Government shall not stand, and it never has stood, on the same basis as the citizen.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will use another illustration, which I think the Senator himself took a part in. Up to the year 1890, for more than a century, the Government insisted that articles imported for the use of the United States should be imported free of duty. In 1890, practically by unanimous vote of Congress, we said, and I think said truthfully and properly, that when the United States imported articles for its own use it should pay the same rate of duty that every individual had to pay throughout the country. That is an exactly parallel case, in my judgment.

Mr. SPOONER. I think it is not a parallel at all, and if it were I think the argument is not with the Senator from Rhode Island. From the foundation of the Government, he says, up to 1890 articles transported from abroad for the use of the United States came in free.

Mr. ALDRICH. For the use of the United States Mr. SPOONER. I say for the use of the Uni I say for the use of the United States. Were the great statesmen who sat where we sit and who legislated for the Government of the United States for over ninety years so far wrong or are we wrong?' It is easy to laugh about it, but there is no argument in a sneer.

If the Government of the United States imports articles from abroad to be sold in competition with the citizen, imports articles from abroad except for the use of the people and for the benefit of the people, then there would be logic in that argument. But it does not do it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator permit me to use another illustration?

Mr. SPOONER. I will get through with this illustration.
Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to use another.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to get through with this illus-

I do not yield assent to the proposition that the change made in 1890 has a solid foundation in statesmanship or wisdom, although, in all human probability, following the lead of the Senator from Rhode Island and my good friend from Iowa [Mr. Allison], to whom I am greatly devoted, I voted for it.

When the Government of the United States has occasion to use an article manufactured abroad, for whom does it use it? For whom is it imported? For some Department? No. For the Government—this mere entity which of itself, apart from the people, is nothing? For the States and the people behind It is imported for the use and benefit of all the people of the United States, and why should it be subject to duty?

Mr. ALDRICH rose.
Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me a question?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. I yield to both Senators.
Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator will permit me.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will give way to the Senator from Rhode Island.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin yields to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. I want to use another concrete illustration.

Mr. SPOONER. Let us get through with this one.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is one of more recent date. I think the

Mr. SPOONER. No; let me answer this. What does the Senator say about this?

Mr. ALDRICH. Which one is that?
Mr. SPOONER. When an article is imported from abroad for the use of the people of the United States by the Government, should it be dutiable?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly it should.

Mr. SPOONER. Why? Mr. ALDRICH. Because the tariff duties are imposed for the protection of domestic manufactures, and not for the benefit of the whole people, except in the sense that the people of the United States are interested in having the development of our manufactures

Mr. SPOONER. The Constitution of the United States for over ninety years was not so construed. The Constitution of the United States requires duties to be uniform. Yet for ninety years and over, articles of the same kind imported by citizens of the United States were subject to duty, and the same articles imported by the Government of the United States for the use of the people of the United States or their benefit came in free. Was the question as to the legality ever raised or challenged?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; it was, indeed, Mr. SPOONER. Was it decided?

Mr. ALDRICH. It was perhaps not decided by the courts, but it was challenged in the discussion of the question from the earliest history down to 1890.

Mr. SPOONER. It never was raised in the world except by manufacturers.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think it was.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, yes; it was. If the Senator will allow me to use right here another concrete illustration—

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Rhode Island allow me to get in there for just a moment?

Mr. ALDRICH. Well, I can not help it.
Mr. TILLMAN. Of course, I do not want to interfere, but the Senator from Wisconsin seems to want to answer your first question and you want to propound a second. I should like to make an observation on the first one.

Mr. ALDRICH. All right.
Mr. SPOONER. I am between the upper and the nether mill-Mr. SPOONER. stone.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; it is the right and the left. I want to ask the Senator from Wisconsin this question: What difference does it make to the Government of the United States if it charges a duty on articles which it itself uses and pays the money to itself?

Mr. SPOONER. What sense is there in it? Mr. TILLMAN. There is no sense in it. But we quit importing because the manufacturers had such a grip over us that we could not continue to import for our own use.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no; we did not quit importing, but we resorted to the sham of paying the duty.

Mr. TILLMAN. Out of one pocket into the other. Mr. SPOONER. Into the other.

Mr. TILLMAN. For what purpose?

Mr. SPOONER. It was the difference I and tweedledee. That is all there is to it. It was the difference between tweedledum

Mr. ALDRICH. Now, if the Senator will allow me, I will use another illustration, which is more recent.

Mr. SPOONER. A concrete one? Mr. ALDRICH. A concrete one in which the Senator from Misconsin, I think, participated.

Mr. SPOONER. I have participated in many here probably, and I have made mistakes.

Mr. ALDRICH. In the last session of Congress the question as to the purchase of material and machinery for the Panama Canal came up in the Senate. The War Department notified Congress that they desired to purchase dredging machines. They could purchase them in Scotland for one price. They could purchase them in the United States for a higher price, a price, perhaps, here less the duties, or in Scotland plus the "We will not permit the Government of the We said. United States to import machinery in competition with our do-mestic manufacturers free of duty." That is absolutely, as a matter of principle, the very question we are now discussing.

Mr. SPOONER. It has nothing in the world to do with it.

Mr. ALDRICH. It has everything to do with it.

Mr. SPOONER. Nothing in the world.
Mr. ALDRICH. If we are legislating for the whole people and for the benefit of the whole people, then we should import our dredging machinery, less the duties, from Scotland, because it is a benefit to the whole people. We should not impose duties upon articles imported by the Government of the United States for its use, which means the use of the whole people. It seems to me that is perfectly and clearly an analogous case.

Mr. SPOONER. That was a matter of policy in a special case. Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ALDRICH rose.

Mr. SPOONER. Perhaps it was well judged; perhaps it was not. But, Mr. President, when the Government of the United States has occasion to import armor plate, if you please, into the United States for use in the construction of one of its war ships, which is to protect our coasts, to protect the honor of our flag, which stands for all the people and the interest of all the people, I can this moment see no sort of reason why the Government should take out of one part of the Treasury the people's money to pay a duty on it and pay it back into another part of the Treasury yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin

Mr. SPOONER. I yield to both Senators at once. Mr. TILLMAN. Two of us can not talk at the same time. To which one do you yield?

Mr. SPOONER. You may settle that between you.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to ask the Senator from Wisconsin what would be the effect of the Government getting reduced rates on its soldiers and munitions of war under this amendment, if it would not be to save some taxes of the whole people?

Mr. SPOONER. Of course, Mr. President, it would save taxes, Mr. TILLMAN. Why is not this case then analogous with the one in which we pay duty to save something for the whole people?

Mr. SPOONER. But it does not save it. We pay the duty. Mr. TILLMAN. To put it in the other pocket. If the Senator will take a hundred dollars out of one pocket and put it into the other pocket I think he will have the same hundred dollars.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Let me state that it is a sham. Mr. SPOONER. Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Wisconsin think that the United States ought to import vessels and arms of all kinds and everything else which it uses free of duty?
Mr. SPOONER. Why not?

Mr. ALDRICH. Why not? That is what I ask.

If the Government of the United States can Mr. SPOONER. obtain the vessel which it wants here at home, it does it generally, because of our views of public policy. But when the time of stress comes, when we are on the verge of war, when we have occasion to use more ships than we can purchase in the United States, we buy them abroad at tremendous prices, as we did in the Spanish war.

Mr. ALDRICH.

Did we not in the Spanish war? Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. SPOONER. We did not. I do not mean war ships,

I do not think we bought any. Mr. ALDRICH.

If the Senator will allow me, we bought TILLMAN. Mr. war ships in the Spanish war, and we would have bought more if we could have gotten them.

Mr. SPOONER. One of the arguments against free ships has always been that it would dismantle our shipyards in the United States, and then that when war came we would be obliged to seek beyond the sea the ships which we wanted in a time of stress, when the supply was small, and when those who had them to sell could take the Government by the throat and make us pay whatever they chose to exact or not sell at all.

Mr. WARREN. As they did in the Spanish war. Mr. SPOONER. As they did in the Spanish war.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator mean to say he thinks the Government of the United States ought to buy its ships and its materials for transportation, and everything connected with the supply of articles that it buys, without observing its own laws in regard to tariff duties?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Rhode Island is very artful.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not artful at all. I am simply asking the Senator a plain question.

Mr. SPOONER. It is not a plain question. I have not argued at all for a moment that the Government of the United States ought to buy its ships abroad as a rule. I am as good a protectionist as the Senator from Rhode Island, although I have thought for some years that the tariff ought to be revised.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will allow me to put a concrete illustration-

Mr. SPOONER. In time of stress and danger, when we need ships and our own people can not furnish them, we are obliged to go abroad and purchase ships. But if the policy were changed and the Government of the United States bought its ships abroad or bought abroad material for all of its ships or a part of its ships, I see no reason why the Government in purchasing the ships abroad or buying the material for the ships abroad should pay duty on the material or the ships.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. GALLINGER. I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that not only the Government but the people of the country They can import it have free material at the present time. and get a drawback upon the duty paid.

Mr. SPOONER. I know that. That is a different thing.

The illustration which I used a few minutes Mr. ALDRICH. ago in regard to the legislation of last year about the purchases of material for use upon the canal is entirely pertinent, it seems to me, to this discussion. We could have purchased abroad dredging machinery for the Panama Canal at less price than we could have bought it in the United States. If the Senator's argument is good for anything, we ought to have imported that machinery.

Mr. SPOONER. That does not follow.

Then the Senator's argument does not hold Mr. ALDRICH. water, it seems to me.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the Senator's opinion.

Mr. ALDRICH. It may be a matter of understanding the argument.

Mr. SPOONER. That does not follow. We have had a policy for a great many years to protect American industries by the levying of adequate duties. I have been in favor of that policy. I have always supported it. I am in favor of it now, although I think a great many of the duties are excessive and therefore detrimental because they are excessive.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Wisconsin think the Government ought to pay the same rates of duty that its citizens pay for their purchases?

Mr. SPOONER. Not necessarily at all. That is what I do

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think we ought to pay

Mr. SPOONER. Where the Government of the United States imports articles from abroad for the use of the people of the United States I do not think there is any sense in its paying duties on them.

Mr. ALDRICH. In other words, the Senator thinks that the Senate and the Congress of the United States adopted an unwise policy in providing that the purchases for the Panama Canal should be made in the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. That does not follow.

Mr. ALDRICH. It does follow, because it is a case exactly in point. They could have bought the dredging machinery in Scotland at a much less price than they could have bought it in the United States.

But our declared policy was to buy it in Mr. SPOONER.

the United States.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

Mr. SPOONER. If we had not decided to buy it in the United

Mr. ALDRICH. For what reason did we buy it in the United States?

Mr. SPOONER. Wait a moment. If we had decided not to buy it in the United States, but to buy it abroad, then the question would have arisen whether we should have paid duty on its importation.

Mr. ALDRICH. We could have bought it for 30 per cent less in Scotland than in the United States; and if there had been no question of public policy otherwise involved, if it was the duty of the Government to buy where they could buy cheapest, and to get the lowest rate of transportation and everything else in connection with it, without regard to the interest or the rights of their own citizens, then we ought to have bought that dredging machinery abroad.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not say that at all, nor do I say it is the duty of the Government to buy where it can buy cheapest. only say that where the Government decides to buy abroad, there is no reason why it should pay duty on the importation of articles for governmental uses. That is all I say.

Mr. TILLMAN and Mr. ALDRICH addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. I can not choose between the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Rhode Island.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wanted to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if his argument in regard to this amendment was not along the line that we would save money for the whole people, the taxpayers, by getting these reduced rates?

Mr. SPOONER. Well?

Mr. TILLMAN. Did he argue that?

Mr. SPOONER. What of it?

Will the Senator say "yes" or "no?" Mr. TILLMAN.

Mr. SPOONER. Admit it.

Mr. TILLMAN. All right. Then why should we not have bought the dredges in Scotland, and thus have saved money for the whole people, who are going to pay for the canal?

Mr. SPOONER. Because of the larger policy against foreign labor and in favor of our own labor.

Mr. TILLMAN. In other words, we want to protect the manufacturers of dredges and have the Government pay 30 per cent more than we could buy them elsewhere for; but when you come to the poor, pitiful railroads you force them to give the Government reduced rates because we are so poor!

Mr. SPOONER. I never before heard the Senator from South Carolina mourn in such an excessively pathetic way about the poor, pitiful railroads.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was only trying to illustrate in a sarcastic way the Senator's attitude toward the railroads

Mr. SPOONER. I do not intend to be beguiled-and I have spoken very much longer than I intended-Mr. BACON. Mr. President-

Mr. SPOONER. Excuse me for a moment. I did not intend to be beguiled into a discussion of the tariff. We have adopted, and for a great many years have adhered to, a large governmental policy which keeps, as far as we may, our own market for our own labor and for our own capital on higher grounds than the mere matter of dollars. I would never give any advan-tage in our American market to foreign capital over our own capital or to foreign labor over our own labor. But I do not agree at all, Mr. President, that the proposition for which I am contending as to this bill has any relation whatever to the larger policy of a protective tariff.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.
Mr. ALDRICH. Then the Senator must have agreed to change the policy made by the McKinley Act as to Government importations from abroad.

Mr. SPOONER. I presume I did, but I do not remember it

I do not see very much sense in it. to-day.

Mr. ALDRICH. In other words, the Senator thinks that the earlier policy was better, does he?

Mr. SPOONER. The policy of protection?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; I am speaking about the policy of allowing the Government of the United States to import its articles free of duty.

Mr. SPOONER. I think if the Government of the United States wanted an article which it could not obtain here at home and imported it from abroad there is no reason why it should pay duty on it.

Mr. President-Mr. BACON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.
Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have been reluctant to interfere in this interesting debate between Senators both of whom are ardent protectionists; and I would not now but that I suppose the colloquy is about ended, and I want to call the Senator's attention back to the direct proposition out of which this debate grew.

If I understand the proposition of the Senator, it is that it is proper that the Government should receive 50 per cent reduction in its freight rates-for instance, as provided in this amendment—upon the ground that all the people get the benefit of it. That is, as I understand, the argument of the Senator. The thing I want to suggest to the Senator is this: The basis of the argument against any discrimination between individuals in freight rates is not that there is such an indisposition to have anybody benefited by such reduction, but because, when a railroad makes a reduction in favor of one man, if it is limited to the proper return upon its investment and for its work, it must make it up by overcharging somebody else. That is the basis upon which the rate legislation proceeded. The point to which I want to call the attention of the Senator is this: Nobody will pretend that when the Interstate Commerce Commission has fixed a rate at a reasonable profit for the railroads, the railroads can carry for the Government for 50 per cent of that rate without great loss to themselves in the transaction. Now, must it not necessarily follow that, if the Government puts this burden upon the railroad, by which it is subjected to loss in the transportation of the Government's troops and munitions of war, as a consequence an excessive rate must be imposed on individuals in order to make up that loss, provided the railroad is compelled to carry at a reasonable rate.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I interrupt the Senator right there?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BACON. I have the floor by the courtesy of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner].

Mr. McCUMBER. With the Senator's permission, I would ask who pays for this difference between the half rate and the The position of the Senator from Wisconsin is that the general public generally gets the benefit; but who pays the extra burden?

Mr. BACON. I was endeavoring, Mr. President-

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator this question: Is not the extra burden paid by everyone who ships freight over that particular line?

Mr. BACON. That is exactly what I was endeavoring to say; and I am very much obliged to the Senator from North Dakota for stating it more plainly than I had previously stated it. I had endeavored to say-and I will repeat it if I did not make myself clear-that necessarily if railroad rates are proper rates, and the railroads are carrying only at a legitimate profit, to carry at 50 per cent of that rate must necessarily subject the railroad to loss; and in order that it may still have a proper profit that loss must be made up by an overcharge on the general public, the people generally, who ship freight over the railroad. I will not interrupt the Senator from Wisconsin further on that point, because I desired to propound a question, not to argue it.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, Mr. President, everyone in the United States and everyone in the States derives the protection which the Government is intended to afford—protection to his property, protection to his liberty, and in one way and another, some more than others, pay their proportion to the support of the Government. What the Government would pay for the transportation of the troops, and munitions of war is, as related to the general transportation of the country, a mere baga-telle—I suppose an absolutely undiscoverable fraction of the business of the railway companies. But that is not quite it. The Government uses the Army for the people as a conservator of the peace. The Army oftentimes must be quickly sent from place to place, for no private purpose ever. There is no profit in it to the Government-none in the world. Its function is a public function always.

Sometimes the Army is sent to protect interstate commerce against violent interruption, which is in the interest of all the business of the people; sometimes it is required to prevent in-terruption of the United States mail, which is in the interest of all the people. It is the furthest removed from any private function, and no one can conceive of any profit to be derived to the Government from its transportation one way or the other, treating the Government as something distinct from the people, because, in the last analysis, the people, and all the people—those who patronize or utilize the railroads and those who do not—must pay the expenses of the Government. Somewho do not—must pay the expenses of the Government. Some-times it is to carry out the guaranty of the Constitution of a republican form of government in the States, and I sometimes think that the time will come, Mr. President, when that may become a very important provision of the Constitution.

I was led into this discussion by the contention that the Government, in this matter of transportation, is on the same basis, and intended to be on the same basis by law, as the individual shippers of the country, and I arose only to call attention to the fact that the principle which moved us to the enactment of the rate law was not at all applicable, Mr. President, to the transportation of Government property.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator permit a question?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.
Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator is arguing with great force that we ought to treat the Government of the United States in this matter differently from what we treat shippers generally; and that really, as I understand the argument, it makes no difference whether the Government is charged one rate or another, that it bears finally upon the whole people as much in one case as it would in the other. Is that the Senator's argument? Mr. SPOONER. Well, admit it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Why not have the Government of the United States pay the same rate as do the people of the country for the transportation of their property?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We can not hear the Senator, and we are very much interested in the discussion.

Mr. ALDRICH. I say, why not have the Government of the United States pay the same rate for transporting its merchandise that the private shipper has to pay?

Mr. WARREN. But we are not doing it. Mr. ALDRICH. Why not?

Mr. WARREN. Because the Government can not pay the same rates, under the law, owing to land-grant and bond-aided railroad differences.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is on account of another consideration entirely, where certain benefits have been given which are supposed to be in law equivalent to this reduction in rates. entirely a different thing from what we are now talking

Mr. WARREN. But even then these are partial and unequal The roads that have paid in full their Government loans rates. are entitled to the same treatment from the Government as are nonpaid-up roads. The condition is that now they are debarred when in competition with other roads because, having paid the full amount of their own indebtedness, they must charge 100 cents on the dollar, while the other roads that are still delinquent and have not paid up get the advantage of the 50 per cent-that is, the road that is allowed to quote the lowest rate commands the business. Therefore the necessity for this legisla-

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it would be the part of a great government, when it had required its citizens to pay rates which are the same to all, not to regard transactions which took place a century ago, but to pay for its transportation what I would be required to pay for my transportation and what every other man in the United States would be required to pay for his transportation.

Mr. SPOONER. The object of the rate law was mainly to prevent discriminations among citizens.

Mr. ALDRICH. But why discriminate between the citizen and the Government which imposes this limitation?

Mr. SPOONER. That begs the question. The theory is to punish the Government for the limitation.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not to punish it at all; but after having legislated promptly and properly on this subject it seems there is no principle in it, because it only means to punish the people.

Mr. President, it was found that all over Mr. SPOONER. the country the railroad companies were charging less to large concerns in the same community than they were to smaller and weaker concerns engaged in the same business and transporting to the same market. That was, Mr. President, an infamy perpetrated by a corporation which derived its right to exist and held its franchise from the public, coupled with the power of eminent domain for the benefit of the public.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, nothing could be worse, if the Senator and I were conducting in competition a business of the same kind in the same community, than for the railway company to give him a lesser rate for transporting carloads or train loads of his commodities to the same market than it gave me for transporting my commodities to that market.

Mr. ALDRICH. Why should not those same equitable considerations apply to the Government of the United States?

Mr. SPOONER. Because as between the Senator from Rhode Island and myself we are competitors. We are carrying on a business for profit, to make money out of it, and the Government of the United States in transporting its troops and its munitions of war is not a competitor with anyone, nor does it carry on that business for a profit.

Mr. ALDRICH. But having the power, the Senator from Wisconsin proposes that the Government of the United States shall say to the railroads of the United States: "You shall treat shippers equally, except the Government of the United States; but we intend to use our force, as the Government of the United States, to reduce your rate one-half, and that deficiency must be made up by charging the other shippers in the United States an additional rate."

Mr. SPOONER. That comes back, Mr. President, to the question with which I started, whether the Government and the individual shippers are upon the same basis or are to be considered from the same standpoint,

Mr. ALDRICH. Well, why should they not be in any court of conscience or equity of which we can conceive?

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to suggest, in reply to the inquiry just made—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does yield to the Senator from Idaho? Does the Senator from Wisconsin

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, yes; I yield always.
Mr. HEYBURN. One answer to the question of the Senator from Rhode Island is that the interstate-commerce law is a penal act, and the Government does not make penal acts to control its own action.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is that an equitable consideration?
Mr. HEYBURN. That is a lawful consideration, and we are a body that makes laws, and not rules of equity. clause of the interstate-commerce act, in referring to whom it shall apply, says, "the provisions of this act shall apply to any corporation or any person or persons engaged in the transportation," etc. It is a penal statute, and it is enforced only through the penal clause. How could you enforce it against the United States Government? The fines are payable to the Government. Can the Government pay a fine to itself for entering into a contract in violation of the provisions of this act?

Mr. ALDRICH. Suppose it is an equitable consideration the Senator is trying in the courts?

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not dealing with equitable considera-With the permission of the Senator from Wisconsin, I desire to say that I opened this question by suggesting the propriety of including the Government within the provisions of the act, and I was dealing purely with the legal rights of the Government in view of the legislation as it is and not as it might have been or should have been.

Mr. SPOONER. This question will arise, Mr. President, if the Interstate Commerce Commission shall decide that the Government in the transportation for governmental purpose of troops and munitions of war is not subject to the restrictions of the interstate-commerce law, and I shall not be surprised if they so hold.

Now, one word further and I shall have finished. I suppose this provision is subject probably to a point of order, but I want to say this, and only this, that a Government which sends enlisted men, paid $13 a month, for tours of duty in the Philippines, etc., and precludes them from a reduced rate of transportation for their families—and there are long periods during which they will be separated from their families and association with their families—is engaged, in my judgment, in very

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to answer first the last proposition of the Senator from Wisconsin, in which he says if a soldier is compelled to go to the Philippines and we do not allow him to get reduced rates for his family-in other words, if we do not amend the solemn law which we enacted last year so as to make an exception to that particular class— it is pretty small business. This is the first time, Mr. President, that I have ever known the Senator from Wisconsin to crawl under a fence when he could step over it just as easily.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Is this law any more solemn than all the other laws enacted by Congress?

Mr. McCUMBER. The point is this, Mr. President: If the Senator wants to provide that a soldier may take his family to the Philippines, why not do it by direct legislation?
Mr. SPOONER. I would vote for that.
Mr. McCUMBER. Why not simply provide funds sufficient to enable him to do so? Why do we not declare in this very bill that in every case where it is proper to take his family to the place where the soldier is located the cost of the transportation shall be paid by the Government, and that will dispose of that matter?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator of course knows-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Da-kota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly. Mr. WARREN. The Senator of course knows that a proposition of that kind would be subject to a point of order on this bill, and any one Senator could stop it.

Mr. McCUMBER. It would be no more subject to a point of order, Mr. President, than is this provision.

Mr. WARREN. That is true; but it would be subject to the same kind of a point of order.

Mr. McCUMBER. It would be subject to the same kind of a point of order, but I do not believe in doing indirectly by the destruction of a principle that which we can do directly without interfering with any principle.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is whether there is a point of order now pending or whether it has been withdrawn?

Mr. McCUMBER. The point of order was suspended by general consent until this matter might be argued, for the very purpose of allowing the Senator in charge of the bill to show good cause, if any he had, why the point of order should not be in-

Mr. TILLMAN. I give notice that as soon as the Senator now occupying the floor has finished I shall renew the point of order and insist upon its being determined.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator will not do that.

Other Senators want to speak.

Mr. McCUMBER. All right. I can not speak for what the Senator may do afterwards. But just now I want to say to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] that his argument, so far as it relates to the transportation of Government goods, is based upon a faulty assumption in his premises, or, I should say, the incompleteness of his first premises. The Senator states, and rightfully states, that if we save $500,000 the people get the benefit of that $500,000, because they save that much which they would have to pay in taxation. That part is absolutely true, and that benefit goes to all the people. But the Senator leaves out the burden. He considers only the benefit to come to all the people and forgets the burden that is laid upon a class of people.

Just right here I want to make that perfectly clear. Suppose, for instance, Mr. President, the Government transports goods from New York to Chicago over the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, the regular rate for which would amount in a year to a million dollars. The Government now gets the benefit of a half rate and saves $500,000. The people, of course, have saved that $500,000, and so far no harm would be done, provided it would balance on those two propositions alone. But do we stop there? The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company have two accounts-a passenger account and a freight account. They expect to make that freight account pay a sufficient amount to give a fair profit and remuneration for the carrying of freight between Chicago and New York. They lose by reason of the Government cutting them down $500,000, do they not? They absolutely lose that which they do not get. If they have not got that $500,000, which would come to them in the natural course of business during that year, they have then lost $500,000. They have got to make up that $500,000, if it is a loss, and they are not already making more than they ought to make.

From what source will they make it up? Not from the whole The people doing business on the Great Northern Railroad between St. Paul and Tacoma are not concerned in the loss of the people doing business on the line of the Baltimore and Ohio between New York and Chicago. Who does make it up? The merchants who ship their goods over the Baltimore and Ohio all along the line from New York to Chicago have got to make up the difference of $500,000. So the burden has been placed upon a locality, upon the people doing business along a certain line, that the whole country may benefit to the extent that has to be made up by their losses. I think that is a fair statement of the proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Da-kota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly. Mr. SPOONER. Under the act of 1866 the Postmaster-General fixes the rates which the telegraph companies are permitted to charge for the transaction of Government business. They are about half the rates charged citizens of the United States for the transaction of their business; and every Senator has a frank which entitles him to send over the telegraph lines of the United States messages on Government business at half the rates which are charged citizens for the same number of words. Of course the citizens have to make that up, but I have never heard any complaint about that in the Senate, and I am not in favor of "drawing the line" on the enlisted men of the Army.

Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Da-kota yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.
Mr. KNOX. I should like to add to what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooners] has said that in the agreement between the United States and the Pacific Cable Company, which permitted the Pacific cable to land its cable at Manila, running from San Francisco by way of Hawaii to Manila, and thence to Hongkong, there is a provision under which the Government of the United States shall have priority in the service over the lines of the Pacific cable at all times, and at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General of the United States without regard to the commercial rate.

Mr. McCUMBER. There was a special grant there, Mr. President, a special consideration, a special benefit, to be obtained from the Government of the United States.

Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. If the Senator will permit me just a word, there was no such grant in respect to the Pacific cable at all. There was nothing that it got from the Government of the United It started from the State of California and it landed at Hawaii and at Manila, occupying no property of the Government at all, merely making a physical contact with property which was under the dominion of the United States.

As to the act of 1866, to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers, the only privilege which a telegraph company has in respect to crossing Government territory is the right to use certain materials for the construction of foundations for telegraph poles and to build telegraph poles on Government land.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from North Dakota pardon me for a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Pennsylvania overlooked a very important concession which the telegraph companies enjoy, and that is the right to construct telegraph lines along all the post-roads of the United States, and all railroads carrying United States mails are in the same act declared to be post-

Mr. KNOX. That has exclusive reference to inland telegraph lines?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. KNOX. It has no reference at all to the Pacific cable.

Mr. BACON. Not to that. I was speaking only of inland

Mr. McCUMBER. The proposition which I made to the Senator from Wisconsin has not been answered, and, in my opinion, it can not be answered, because everyone must see that the burden would be upon the people of a particular locality. That is not equally true in the matter of the telegraph service, which is distributed over the entire United States, and possibly one line may be used as much as another. It must also be borne in mind that we have only two or three telegraph companies in the United States, and so the burden would fall practically equally over the entire country.

But, Mr. President, what I maintain is that if by giving the Government special privileges, by giving it certain benefits, any particular segregated portion of the people of the United States must pay for those benefits, then we ought not to grant them. If it is so distributed that it is general over the entire United States, it makes not so much difference. Mr. ALDRICH rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] a question-not the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island. Mr. ALDRICH. The question I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania is this: The difference in rates between different shippers prior to the adoption of the so-called "Elkins and I have heard some intimations that even since that time-was not so great as the difference he is now calling attention to between the rates paid by the United States and those paid by private people for the use of the cable in a private way. It was the purpose of the Elkins Act and of the act which we passed last year to equalize the charges for transportation to the shippers of the United States, and it comes with very ill grace, I think, from the Congress to ask that this great Government be treated in a different way from that in which its citizens are treated and that the rate which it shall be charged, not by suggestion, but practically by force, shall be half those charged to the people who patronize those roads, who are all the people of the United States, because they are all interested.

suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the case of a cable, laid under certain conditions and restrictions imposed by the Government of the United States as to its own service. is hardly an analogous case to that which we now have under discussion, where the Government itself has enforced upon all of its citizens an equality of rates for transportation and where the Government is the first to violate this principle, and is now asking that the rates perforce shall be reduced one-half to this Government for the same kind of transportation that citizens are required to pay for in full.

Mr. TILLMAN. In accordance with my notice that I should insist on the point of order-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Unless the Senator from South Carolina is especially anxious to make his point of order immediately, I should like, with the Senator's courteous permission, to occupy two or three minutes. I want the point of order settled. I do not desire to speak for more than a minute or two.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will yield to that Senator, but to no other, until the point of order is determined.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before the Senator yields I will say—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from South Carolina as soon as the Senator from Indiana

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was about to say to the Senator before he yields for this purpose that what I shall say is not an argument upon the direct point of order, but on an important statement made in the course of this debate. If the Senator from South Carolina feels that he should insist upon the point of order now, all right.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am entirely willing to yield to the Senator, in order to give him an opportunity to make the remarks he wishes to make. I do not want to be discourteous at all.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thank the Senator. As I said, I shall not detain the Senate more than a moment, and in that moment I shall not speak upon the point of order which has been argued, but upon a statement made, not once, but reiterated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner], in the course of his remarkably brilliant debate upon this question, where he touched, not only on this point of order, but made statements of importance upon other questions—upon the tariff, upon the nature of our Government, and, in general, upon the philosophy of our constitution as a nation.

The Senator from Wisconsin in the course of his remarks said with great emphasis, as Senators will remember, that there was no such thing as commerce of the United States, that it was commerce of the States; and when I asked the Senator the question whether it might not more properly be called the commerce of the people, the Senator did correct himself for a moment, but later on returned and again said there is no such thing as commerce of the United States—that it is the commerce of the States.

Mr. President, this remark taken alone might not require either time or attention for reply, but as a part of a general-I will not say movement—but a general activity in reading into the Constitution the philosophy of the Articles of Confederation, it perhaps at least does challenge some, if not more than a moment's, attention. For, Mr. President, it is not true either in law or in fact that the commerce of this country is the commerce of the States. It is true both in law and in fact that it is the commerce of the people.

When a merchant in the city of New York consigns his goods to a person living on the Pacific slope it is not the State of New York sending those goods to California, nor even a citizen of New York shipping those goods to a citizen of California. It is a citizen of the United States shipping those goods to another citizen of the United States; and throughout the entire 4,000 miles of its transit it is not for one single instant under the control or the jurisdiction of the States so far as commerce is concerned. It is the commerce of the country, which makes the life of the country and the strength of the nation. So when the Senator said there is no commerce except the commerce of the States it was a statement which is not correct, either as a matter of law or as a matter of fact.

Mr. President, I should have passed that with the Senator's admission that he was wrong, but later on, perhaps five minutes later, the Senator again asserted that there was no such thing as commerce of the United States. I hold in my hand a publication with which every Senator is familiar, the Monthly Summary of the Commerce and Finance of the United States. I find that all the figures are made with reference to the commerce of the nation. No importations by any citizen of this country come in through the ports of a State, so far as ports of entry are concerned. They come in through the ports of the nation. All of our foreign commerce is the commerce of the citizens, not of the State, but of the citizens of the nation. and is so treated not only in law but in fact.

And what is true of the foreign commerce of the United States. as set out in the Government's publication, issued by authority and by direction of the Congress of the United States, is true of its domestic commerce. In these pages [exhibiting] are set out not only the figures with reference to the foreign commerce of the country, but of its domestic trade as well. And it is all treated not as the commerce of a State with another State, not even as the commerce of a citizen of Illinois with a citizen of Georgia, but as the commerce of a citizen of the United States with another citizen of the United States, utterly regardless of

Mr. President, when a thing becomes commerce and passes the lines of a State, the States, for the purposes of that commerce, absolutely cease to exist. They do not exist so far as that commerce is concerned, just as the nation does not exist so far as commerce exclusively within a State is concerned. In support of that I will read two sentences from a jurist and a judge who afterwards became one of the very greatest of the justices of the Supreme Court of the nation:

In this matter-

That is, he is speaking of the matter of commerce, which the Senator from Wisconsin says is the commerce of the States-

Says Mr. Justice Bradley in Stockton v. Baltimore and New York Railroad Company (32 Fed Rep., on p. 17)-

In this matter

That is, in commerce-

the country is one and the work to be accomplished is national, and State interests, State jealousies, and State prejudices do not require to be consulted.

I call especial attention to this last sentence, which I shall It is a sentence which rings with vigor and eloquence, as did many of the great passages from the great Chief Justice Marshall:

In matters of foreign and interstate commerce there are no States.

Mr. President, neither I nor many here who believe with me have felt it was necessary at any time during many of the assertions that have occurred during this session-during this recrudescence of the philosophy of the Articles of Confederation, this constant assertion that the States were the things that had to deal with commerce-to notice them before, because we have been busy, and the days speed by.

But finally this assertion, made so repeatedly, does command attention. But, even now, it requires no more than to quote the words of one of the most learned justices who ever sat upon the Supreme Bench of the Republic. I assert what everybody will say is a truism, but which after all is increasingly denied, that this country in matters of commerce is one country and not forty-seven countries. It is one people dealing among themselves, and not forty-seven peoples dealing with one another. They live under one flag and not under forty-seven

So, Mr. President, as a matter of fact, as proved by this volume of figures, and as a matter of law, as proved by this decision and many others, the Senator from Wisconsin, I submit, was in error when he said that the commerce of this country is the commerce not of the United States, but of the States.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I will not interrupt the Senator. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Go ahead.

Mr. SPOONER. I rose to ask the Senator a question. Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield.

Mr. SPOONER. From what decision was the Senator reading? I was out of the Chamber.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. I read from Stockton v. Baltimore and

N. Y. R. Co., 32 Federal Reporter, page 17, the opinion by Mr. Justice Bradley, who subsequently was on the bench of the Supreme Court.

Mr. SPOONER. What does it hold?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will read it again. It will take but a second. I will not detain the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]

Mr. SPOONER. SPOONER. I am not the Senator from South Carolina. BEVERIDGE. I know; but the Senator from South Carolina is impatient to make his point of order.

Mr. SPOONER (to Mr. TILLMAN). Do you want to say something?

Mr. TILLMAN. I gave notice, when the Senator from Wisconsin was out of the Chamber, that as soon as the Senator from Indiana had finished-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will take but a moment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should insist upon the point of order being ruled on. Of course I do not want the Senator from Wisconsin to be cut off from this interesting intellectual discussion that is going on between these two great constitutional lawyers.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. Justice Bradley said:

In this matter-

I was replying, if I may be permitted to observe, to the Senator from Wisconsin, to his statement, which was repeated two or three times, about as follows: "Talk about the commerce of the United States," said the Senator; "there is no such thing. It is the commerce of the States." And then, when I asked him if it might not more properly be considered the commerce of the people, he replied: "Of course that is axiomatic;" and I let it go at that. Later on the Senator returned to the charge and said: "There is no such thing as commerce of the United States." I was attempting to show that in that statement the Senator was, which is very unusual—almost unprecedented, in fact—in error. Now the Senator asks for the quotation from the decision. Mr. Justice Bradley says:

In this matter-

That is, in the matter of commerce which the Senator says is the commerce of the States-

the country is one and the work to be accomplished is national, and State interests, State jealousies, and State prejudices do not require to be consulted.

And this is the crowning sentence:

In matters of foreign and interstate commerce there are no States. Mr. SPOONER. I have no occasion whatever to quarrel, if I had the temerity to do so, with that statement made by Mr. Justice Bradley, which I think the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveringel has read accurately and failed to understand. Supreme Court of the United States had said before that that in regulating commerce among the States there were no State lines. That is to say, Congress could not regulate commerce among the States if it were stopped at State lines. There is such a thing as commerce among the States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE, Yes. Commerce of the people among the States.

Mr. SPOONER. There is such a thing as commerce of the States, because the Constitution gives to Congress the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." I have never consciously played at all upon words. The Senator from Indiana asked me to draw the distinction, from the standpoint from which I was speaking, between the States and the people. I said it was axiomatic that the foundation of the States was the people. They ordained the State governments. They could destroy

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And they ordained the National Government.

Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes. Mr. SPOONER. Well, Mr. President, sub modo; that is academic-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator pardon me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SPOONER. Of course.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask this question: Does the Senator say the people ordained the States, but that they did not ordain the Constitution of the United States?

In a way they did, and in a way they did not. Mr. SPOONER. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Constitution, in the preamble, says: We, the people," etc., "do ordain."
Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That Constitution was adopted at the pells by the votes of the people and not in conventions by the States.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That establishment of the Constitution by the people, both the preamble to the Constitution and in actual voting at the polls, is declared to have been the ordina-tion of the Constitution by the people and not the States, in those exact words by Chief Justice Marshall in Gibbons v. Ogden and again in McCulloch v. Maryland. So when the Senator says the people did ordain the government of the States and did not ordain the Government of the United States, I merely call his attention to those facts.

Mr. SPOONER. The people have ordained everything in this country

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am glad to hear the Senator say it.
Mr. SPOONER. They ordained the States. They created them. They ordained, of course, the Constitution and the Federal Government. In the last analysis the whole foundation of the Government is the people.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; and very nearly in the first analysis. Mr. SPOONER. Of course the State government or the Federal Government is really an agency, an instrumentality, of the people. But the people are banded into States, and the States are technically and really the constituent elements of the Union. The States as States are represented in the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. They are.
Mr. SPOONER. Not the people. Delaware has as many Senators in this body as has Indiana or New York.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit an interruption

I shall not interrupt him very much.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I not only concede but assert as strongly as the Senator can that the people ordained the States. The State rests on the people. But I ask the Senator to admit and assert as warmly as I do that the people also directly ordained the United States Constitution, and it rests directly upon them, and that is as much an agency of the people as the States are agencies of the people.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; but an amendment to the Constitution of the United States is not submitted to the people. It is submitted to the legislatures of the States, and the relation of the people of the States to the Federal Government is conducted, in our form of Government, through the States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Part of it.
Mr. SPOONER. Well, mainly. I do not know what the Senator and I are discussing. I think we agree upon everything.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think we are agreed upon these fundamental things; but I will tell the Senator what I was discuss-I was attempting to show, after the Senator had retired from the Chamber-I wish he had been here; I did not take very long

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator did not notify me that he was

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; nor would I. I did not want to interrupt the Senator during his debate. Mr. SPOONER. The Senator did.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I asked a question, but I did not want to interrupt the thread of his argument just at that time, which was very vivid and entertaining.

Mr. SPOONER. I thank the Senator for his sarcasm.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I say that very sincerely and very earnestly. I seldom indulge in sarcasm or anything else except I rose to say that the Senator's statement that what I mean. there is no such thing as the commerce of the United States, that it is the commerce of the States, was not accurate either as a matter of law or as a matter of fact.

Mr. SPOONER. From the standpoint of the Constitution of the United States and the clause in it which gives the Congress the power to regulate commerce, it is absolutely accurate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In reply to that, I will state that the Constitution says that Congress shall have power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes," and not commerce with the States, and just that distinction that is drawn between those two words—the word "of" which the Senator uses and the word "among" which the Constitution employs and I quote—is the vital distinction between the Articles of Confederation and the Constitution, so far as commerce is concerned.

Mr. SPOONER. I think I understand the history of the Constitution.

Mr. TILLMAN. I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota now if he is going to ask for a ruling on the point of order. If not, I shall ask for it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order, if it is interposed. Does the Senator from North Dakota renew the point of order?

Mr. McCUMBER. I renew the same point of order and, of course, to that portion of the amendment which I have already designated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again report the portion of the amendment to which the point of order is addressed.

The Secretary. On page 39, beginning with line 10, where it starts "Provided further," and ending with the word "rates," in line 19.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is clearly of opinion that the portion of the amendment to which the point of order is addressed is an effort to amend the interstate-commerce law. a general law, and is therefore repugnant to the rule which provides that no amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to a general appropriation bill. The point of order is therefore sustained.

Mr. TILLMAN. Unless the Senator in charge of the bill can explain-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the remaining portion of the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to it and to ask him to explain what is meant by it. I note here that it says, "that leaves to be absent from the Philippine Islands, other than to return to the United States" I should like to know what that means. To what part of the world would leaves to be absent, for officers, apply if it were not to come home?

Mr. WARREN. They might want to go in the other direction-to go around the world.

Mr. TILLMAN. That might be; but they would either come home by the east or the west-either through the Isthmus of Suez or across the Pacific. I want to know if this is intended to send officers on junketing tours around in Asia or somewhere It is the latter part of this amendment, from line 19, on page 39, to the top of the next page, page 40. I do not understand it, and the Senator can probably explain very clearly what is intended to be accomplished by it.

Mr. WARREN. I will be glad to do so when the Senator is through.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am through.
Mr. WARREN. The officers of the Army are entitled to leaves of absence the same as civilian employees and others. It is for thirty days in a year. After we had placed a part of our Army in the Philippines it was perfectly obvious that an officer in the Philippines would be unable to use his leave of absence of thirty days to come home to the United States to visit his family, he being in most cases unable to take his wife and children with him. Therefore the leaves were made cumulative, so that an officer serving in a foreign place could let his leave accumulate until he might have sixty or ninety days in the course of three years, we will say. An officer to-day may be in Zamboanga, another in Manila, perhaps another in Jolo. desire leave of absence, and they are entitled to it. They are at these remote places because they have been ordered there. With the modes of transportation that we have between those points and Manila, which is the common point from which all our transports sail to the United States, it takes one, two, or three weeks to get from those lower points to Manila, and on return to get back. So a man starting from Zamboanga on leave of absence for ninety days would really get less than sixty, while the man starting from Manila would get his full time.* It is simply to equalize it.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is to equalize travel in the islands?

That is all. Mr. WARREN.

Mr. TILLMAN. From Mindanao and Luzon?

Mr. WARREN. That is all.

Now I understand it, Mr. TILLMAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer the amendment which I send forward, to be inserted at the end of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert at the end of the

That a statue of Gen. Nathanael Greene shall be erected on the battlefield of Guilford Court House, in Guilford County.

That to pay for the construction, erection, and completion of said statue, and the preparation of a site for the same, the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

That the site for said statue, within the limits of said battlefield of Guilford Court House, shall be selected by the Secretary of War, but no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be expended until the site so selected shall be conveyed free of cost to the United States, and there shall be provided for the public use an open highway thereto.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rose to suggest that if that amendment is a serious amendment, I have one to offer on behalf of the erection of a statue to General Stark. hend the Senator does not seriously think that that amendment will go in the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator objects to it, it will not,

I suppose.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the point of order against it, Mr. President.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is an amendment that passed the Senate in the form of a bill. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Wetmore], and was reported here, and passed the Senate. It was before the committee, and the committee made no objection to it, and said they would make no objection if I introduced it here.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that a bill for the erection of a statue to General Stark on the banks of the Merrimac, in New Hampshire, has passed the Senate three times.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the proposed amendment is out of order and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. DICK. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in on page 52 of the bill, after line 10.

The Secretary. On page 52, after line 10, insert:

For marking the places where American soldiers fell and were temporarily interred in Cuba and China, $4,000, said sum to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the bill.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

That the sum of $25,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the completion of a monument to the memory of the soldiers who fell in the battle of New Orleans in the war of 1812, said monument to be completed under the direction and approval of the Secretary of War: Provided, That the State of Louisiana shall cede and transfer its jurisdiction to the property on which said monument is to be completed in accordance with the provisions of act No. 41 of the legislature of that State, approved July 19, 1902: Provided further, That when said monument is completed the responsibility of maintaining the same and keeping the grounds surrounding it shall remain with the United Daughters of 1776 and 1812, free of any expense or responsibility on the part of the Government of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DICK. On page 21, after line 7, I move to insert what send to the desk.

The Secretary. After line 7 on page 21 it is proposed to in-

On and after July 1, 1907, the minimum pay of all officers, non-commissioned officers, and enlisted men of the Army be, and the same is hereby, increased 20 per cent over and above that now provided by law: Provided, That section 1267, Revised Statutes, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and for the payment of such increase $5,504,833.84 is hereby appropriated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it is not, I suppose, to any Senator an agreeable thing to interpose a point of order to an amendment that affects so many worthy people and which would carry to so many people and to so many households additional income and additional comfort. But we ought not, on an appropriation bill, without discussion and without deliberation, to consent to an amendment of this kind. If the amendment should pass without a point of order being made, I should certainly feel constrained to put the Navy and all other branches of the Government that are military or quasi military upon the same basis, to say nothing of the civilian branches. The Revenue Marine Service, the Life-Saving Service, the men who are leading lives that are in peril every hour of the day, ought not to be left out. I think the Senate ought not to adopt a measure of this kind without full consideration.

I understand that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr.

MCCUMBER] has introduced a bill which has been referred to some proper committee, providing for an investigation and a report as to the branches of the Government to be affected by a rearrangement of salaries. Whenever this is done, the Army ought not to be selected as the one beneficiary, nor the Navy, nor the Revenue Marine, nor the Life-Saving Service, nor the postal service, nor any one branch,

Under this consideration, Mr. President, while it is not, as I have said, an agreeable thing to do, I am constrained to make the point of order that the amendment is, under Rule XVI, an amendment increasing an appropriation, not estimated for, and not reported by any committee.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, it certainly was not expected when the amendment was offered to the Senate that a vote would be had upon it without a full and fair discussion of the question as to whether the conditions merited this increase of pay to the Army. Certainly, it is utterly impossible to submit an amend-ment to the bill which will affect alike the Navy and other branches of the service. I quite agree with the Senator from Maine that if the increase is made in the Army pay the same increase ought finally to obtain and apply in other branches of the Government.

The increase is not a large percentage, being 20 per cent, over pay that was fixed over thirty-six years ago, the last Army pay having been fixed by Congressional action in July, 1870. It is well understood by Senators that the increased cost of living in that period is much greater than the proposed increase of pay would cover. It is also generally understood that there is better pay and higher pay in every line of occupation, in every branch of every profession, in this country than obtained in 1870.

The Senate is also familiar with the fact that largely increased expenses are entailed by reason of new conditions which have obtained since the war with Spain in 1898. Frequent and unexpected transfers are made to various posts not only within the country, but in the island possessions, until it is a well-understood fact among Army officers and those who have interested themselves sufficiently to make inquiry into the matter that only the higher grades in Army service secure more than is fairly sufficient to meet the absolutely necessary expenses, if quite that,

Service in the Tropics has added to the expense not only as to clothing and uniform, but as to the cost of living and the cost of the education of the children of officers. Then there are increased premiums of insurance and other items which go to make up the total cost of living and increase it beyond the point at any earlier period.

This increase of pay ought to work a much better class of enlistments than we have been able to get under the low pay which now obtains. I have no doubt if adopted the percentage of desertions, which are already very large, 7 per cent during the last year, I am informed, and which is a percentage above that which obtained before, would be greatly reduced, in that it would offer an inducement for the retention of men in the service who are desirable as soldiers and who by reason of the greater contentment resulting from increased pay would feel an inclination to continue their service in the Army.

The amendment applies alike to officers and to enlisted men. It is so late in the session that I assume it would be a very difficult task to make a readjustment on equalization of pay. am not sure that it is fairly equalized; I am not sure but that it is fairly equalized. It is fair to presume that in the adjustment of pay during all the legislation which has obtained in more than a century of time in the creation and development of our Army conditions have been understood and reasons sufficient have been given or presented which make the pay of the highest officers seem to us more than adequate, when perhaps it is not. I think it is universally conceded that the pay of enlisted men is too low, and that of all the lower grades of noncommissioned and commissioned officers the pay is too low. I would rather that some few of the highly paid officers should receive perhaps even more than might seem to all a sufficiency than that those of the lower grades should not receive what is fairly just and their merited due.

We are spending a great deal of money in many branches of the service, and I know of no appropriation which pays better for the security and the insurance to life and property than that which is appropriated for the common defense of the country and the enforcement of the nation's laws. Nor do I begrudge any soldier his pay, however much it may be, so long as he performs that service honorably, loyally, and patriotically. I shall regret very much, Mr. President, if we may not at the end of the discussion of this proposition secure consent to have this question voted upon by the Senate and a fair test of its strength made possible here.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think I appreciate the feelings of my good friend from Maine [Mr. HALE] in performing what he considers are his duties here, as he always unquestionably does even when such duty may be repugnant to generous impulses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is prepared to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. I would prefer to have a moment before the Chair makes the ruling if the point of order is not pressed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine withhold his point of order?

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator withhold it for a moment?

Mr. HALE. Certainly; I withhold the point of order. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming will proceed.

Mr. WARREN. We recognize that the Senator from Maine is a senior on this side of the Chamber; that he is a veteran in all legislative matters, especially in matters of appropriations. He naturally guards jealously the rights of the Senate, the conditions of each appropriation bill, and, putting the matter upon strictly parliamentary grounds, I must confess that perhaps I erred in not immediately making a point of order.

We all understand that a question of this kind is a large one to put on at a late hour in an appropriation bill; that we should have time for debate. But the equities in the case appealed to me so strongly that I wished some expression of opinion upon it, and so refrained from making a point of order.

It is true that there are those other than Army people who need an advance in salary. I have listened with interest to the debate on one of the angles, if I may call it an angle, of the difficult questions we have had up in debate the last day or two in connection with this bill, where expressions have been brought out by nearly all the Senators who have referred to it, and it seems to be unanimously admitted that certain men, if not all, in the Army are underpaid. I did not plainly hear the reading of the terms, but as I understood the amendment, it covers not only the Army, but the Navy and the Marine Corps, which is a part of the Navy, and the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Now, as to the Army itself, we have in the past decade indirectly cut down the salaries of officers and men. Formerly the Army was moved less frequently, it was moved short distances, and the expenses incident to such removals were very slight. We had a style and supply of uniform that cost about one-third, in the first place, and not much more than one-half in annual expense of what the uniform of the officers costs them They have suffered the same as have all the employees, by the rise of the commodities of life that they have had to purchase.

Mr. President, if we were all of the same opinion and there were no objections, we would waive the point of order and consent to this increase.

But I can not contend, and am not going to contend for a moment that a point of order can not be made, or, indeed, from a parliamentary standpoint that it ought not to be made.

But I want to make an appeal to the Senate. I believe I have a right to expect the Senator who makes the point of order to be willing to admit that this is a pressing question, and one that must very soon come up and be treated with, and I hope liberally. As to the sum total of cost, possibly in the way of information, we ought to have something of record, and unless there is objection I will ask that this paper which I send to the desk may be inserted in the Record, so as to show what the cost will be to the United States if the increase is made. It is not as large as many people think.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without

Without objection, the matter will be inserted in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Sir: Replying to your letter of the 23d instant requesting to be furnished with a statement showing the amount of money that will be required for the increase of pay contemplated in H. R. 21400 as it affects the Revenue-Cutter Service, I have the honor to state the same to be as follows: $121,155.50.

I suggest a few changes in the wording of the bill. "Revenue-Marine Service" should be changed to "Revenue-Cutter Service" in the title and in line 5, page 1, and in line 19, page 3. These changes will comply with the law in respect to the proper designation of the Service.

In line 13, page 3, after the word "Academy," there should be inserted "and cadets of the line of the Revenue-Cutter Service."

In line 13, page 3, after the word "Academy," there should be inserted "and cadets of the line of the Revenue-Cutter Service." Our cadets now receive the same compensation as cadets of the Military Academy.

In line 15, page 3, after the word "clerks," there should be inserted "of the Navy: "so that the provision will have no reference to these officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service, who are not of the same rank as warrant officers and mates of the Navy. I return the bill containing the changes I have suggested.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Maine to bear with me a moment with his point of order.

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia. Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] is very gallant, and he will remember that a very prominent general notified the country and the officers of the Army that he did not believe it was advisable for a lieutenant to marry. I am very sure we have plenty of very sweet American girls who would be delighted to marry some of these young men with the beautiful uniform, brass buttons, and Yet these young men feel too poor; and when they have been admonished by the Department that they should not marry until they have sufficient means of their own, they go on and become confirmed bachelors, and we lose a number of established good homes and some of our best American girls lose good husbands.

Mr. President, we all admit that the salary is inadequate. Only this last week I had two young men-one from my own State—asking my advice about resigning from the Army. was offered much better pay by the company which is putting a tunnel under the city of New York. He told me that it would be seven years and a half before he could possibly hope to be a first lieutenant, and that his pay would be much better in the employment of a company outside of the Army.

Now, if the Senator will stop to think a moment, will it not lead eventually to our getting a lower class of men to attend the academies? Young men who have the snap and the brains will conclude that they can go into other schools and acquire an education and immediately step into civil employment that will pay them much better than the salary of officers

Mr. President, if I had my way in this matter, I certainly would vote a greater increase than 20 per cent, because it has been shown that the difference between the conditions of life now and in 1872, when the wages were established, is enormous.

I can hope nothing from this talk unless I could persuade my genial friend from Maine, in consideration of my first suggestion, which, I think, is one that would appeal most to him, to withdraw his objection and let us increase the salaries of these withdraw his objection and let us increase the salaries of these young lieutenants so as to enable them to marry.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CULBERSON. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from Texas.
Mr. CULBERSON. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Dick] carries with it an appropriation of I was called out of the Chamber while the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] was speaking upon that point, but as I came in he sent to the desk some manuscript containing an estimate of the increase that would be made necessary by the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from I should be glad if the Senator from Wyoming would state what is the aggregate amount as shown by the paper he sent to the desk.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there was some confusion, and I do not know that I caught the exact language of the amendment, and do not know whether the amendment carries an exact appropriation in dollars and cents.

Mr. DICK. It does.

Mr. WARREN. What is the amount? Mr. CULBERSON. It is $5,504,853.84.

Mr. DICK. It only applies to the Army. Mr. WARREN. And confines it to the Army?

Mr. DICK. Yes.
Mr. WARREN. The figures I sent to the desk may be read if desired. The amount, including the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Revenue-Cutter Service, is but a little over $8,000,000; but I assume that the figures in the amendment are correct as regards the Army alone.

Mr. CULBERSON. Undoubtedly that is true; but I supposed the Senator from Wyoming in the statement sent to the desk had segregated the Army from the Navy.

Mr. WARREN. Yes. I have no figures before me, but if the Senator wishes they might be read from the desk.

Mr. CULBERSON. I shall not stop for that. I merely want to get in the neighborhood of what is necessary to provide for this increase.

Mr. DICK. The amount is stated in my amendment, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. CULBERSON. On what does the Senator from Ohio base his amendment in that respect—upon the report of the War Department?

Mr. DICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. I should like to have the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale], as I did not catch all of his remarks, state whether he intends to suggest to the Senate that we should not proceed with this proposed increase because of the fact that there is not now time to estimate as to the other branches of the service, or whether he intends to be understood that he does not think there ought to be, either now or in the near future, any increase in any branch of the service.

Mr. HALE. Well, Mr. President, I did not rush in with this point of order.

Mr. BACON. The Senator does not ordinarily rush into anything.

Mr. HALE. No; I hope not. I waited until the Chair was just putting the question whether we should adopt this amendment. It is clearly subject to the provisions of Rule XVI, and I did not consider when I made the point of order under that rule that it was necessary or that it would be anything but an intrusion for me to state whether, in my opinion, this increase ought to be here in an appropriation bill. I think if I had put it upon that ground it would have been an intrusion. I make the point simply upon the rule, and I think the amendment is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator to say in the portion of his remarks which I heard that if this increase were granted it would be nothing but just and proper to grant a corresponding increase in the other branches of the service, to wit, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Revenue-Cutter Service, etc. That is what prompted the inquiry from me to know whether the Senator, in whose judgment we all have the greatest confidence, in view of the fact not only of his position upon the Appropriations Committee, but he being at the head of the Naval Committee-to know whether, in the judgment of the Senator, there should be no increase in the present or in the near future, or whether the Senator is simply of the opinion that the time is not now convenient to estimate and make provision as to the other branches of the service, and therefore there should not be a discrimination made as to this.

I am prompted also to seek to make inquiry of the Senator by the fact that we do not seem to have hesitated, when other increases were proposed for the different branches of the service. to make the increase in view of the fact that at that time there was no provision or contemplation of increase in other branches of the service.

Mr. HALE. Well, Mr. President, I will consider that question when we have the bills before us.

Mr. BACON. I am very sorry not to have the Senator's suggestion in that regard now, but I hope we shall have it very

Mr. HALE. I shall not disregard it when such a bill is properly before the Senate.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Dick] a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HALE. Well, I will yield if the Senator is one of those Senators who wants to put himself on record with the Army people as in favor of their increase. I do not want to shut out any Senator who seeks the opportunity of letting the Army know that he is in favor of their increase, and if the Senator rises for that purpose, I will yield.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I have not asked permission to interrupt for that purpose at all. The Senator from Maine misconstrues my object if that is what he wishes to imply. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio a question based upon the answer he made a while ago, to the effect that he got his in-formation from a report. I should like to inquire where that report came from and whether it was an estimate made by the Department?

Mr. DICK. It could not be termed an estimate made by the Department, but it was an estimate made, I will say, based upon a computation of the pay now received by the Army.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask, did it not come as an answer to an inquiry directed to the Paymaster-General from some one in the other House who desired that information?

Mr. DICK. Yes, sir; it came in that way.

Mr. WARREN. It was not a Department matter, except in response to an inquiry from the introducer of the bill in the

A bill was introduced in the House of Representatives and a like bill was introduced in the Senate to increase the pay of the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Revenue-Cutter Service 20 per cent. The author of the bill in the other House wrote to the Department for estimates, which were forwarded, and the figures sent to the desk were the same as those received in response to the inquiry of the gentleman who introduced the bill in the House of Representatives.

Mr. MALLORY. Did the response, in answer to that inquiry, contain any recommendation?

Mr. DICK. Yes, sir; there were also recommendations that came from the Department.

Mr. MALLORY. That that should be done?

Mr. DICK. In each instance it was recommended that it should be done

Mr. MALLORY. Then I submit, if that is the case, if there was an estimate and a recommendation, the amendment is not subject to the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Rule XVI provides, among other things, that-

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, and sustains the point of order, the proposed amendment being in contravention of the rule just cited.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] having kindly withdrawn his objection, I desire to reoffer the amendment which I heretofore offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

That a statue of Gen. Nathanael Greene shall be erected on the battlefield of Gullford Court House, in Gullford County, N. C.

That to pay for the construction, erection, and completion of said statue and the preparation of a site for the same the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

That the site for said statue, within the limits of said battlefield of Gullford Court House, shall be selected by the Secretary of War, but no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be expended until the site so selected shall be conveyed free of cost to the United States, and there shall be provided for the public use an open highway thereto.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman] suggested to me that, at a time when I was absent from the Chamber, an amendment for the erection of a statue had been inserted in the bill, and he appealed to me to withdraw the point of order, which I did; but, Mr. President,

I desire to offer an amendment to that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman] will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following:

adding thereto the following:

That the sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of an equestrian statue of Maj. Gen. John Stark within the limits of the city of Manchester, N. H., and for the proper preparation, grading, and inclosing of the lot and foundation upon which said statue shall be erected, which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War or such officer as he may designate: Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be drawn from time to time only as may be required during the progress of the work and upon the requisition of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be so expended until a design for said statue shall be accepted by the Secretary of War and the Joint Committee on the Library, and until a suitable lot of land in said Manchester for the erection of said statue shall be conveyed, with all the right, title, and interest therein of the owner thereof, to the United States, and the deed duly recorded, and the city of Manchester shall have provided for public use an open highway or other satisfactory means of access thereto. public thereto.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallin-

GER] to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire what is the reason for this ex-$15,000 and the other is $40,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. The difference is that this provides for an equestrian statue, I will say to the Senator, which I think is more expensive than the other.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I ask if this is the proper time to interpose a point of order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is it to an amendment that has already been agreed to? The bill is not yet in the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. I thank the Chair.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. If it is desired that the amendment shall be reserved, it may be done, and the Senate can act upon the other amendments.

Mr. CLAPP. I call attention to the amendment on page 17, line 10. This amendment provides that a clerk in no way connected with the Army, except that he may be a clerk in the paymaster's department, after thirty-five years of faithful service may be nominated for the office of first lieutenant. It seems to me that that is subject to the suggestion that it is general legislation. The difficulty about it is that it involves a question which the country and Congress are considering more or less, and have got to consider—the question of a civil pension list. I do not believe that this is the time or the place to establish a precedent in the matter of a civil pension list. So I make the point of order against the amendment.

Will the Senator withhold the point of order Mr. WARREN. for a moment?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly. Mr. WARREN. Was the Senator in the Chamber when this matter was discussed the other day?

Mr. CLAPP.

CLAPP. No, sir. WARREN. If the Senator had been in the Chamber when this was under discussion, I do not believe that he would have raised the point of order. This is not, as the Senator thinks, the establishment of a civil pension roll. We have a few men employed in the Army as paymasters' clerks. They occupy a position entirely different from that of any other employee or officer. The are to all intents and purposes commissioned officers, but they have no commissions. They have been treated largely as such in the matter of the requirements demanded of them, etc. Many of our most useful paymasters came from the corps of paymasters' clerks. Formerly, and until law forbade it, paymasters could be appointed from civil life; and it was usually the pleasure of the President to appoint and of the Senate to confirm largely from these well-tried men, and they are to-day among the best paymasters in the Army. Paymaster Towar, who stands next to the top and would be the Paymaster-General to-day except for his courtesy in standing aside for an older man, also Muhlenberg, and others came from the corps of paymasters' clerks.

A paymaster's clerk is under bond; he serves at different points all over the country, and he is in reality a paymaster a good deal of the time. If he has served as long as thirty-five years he ought to have some of the advantages that are accorded everyone else in the Army who is called upon to perform anything like the duties he performs and to travel all over the country as he does. As it is now, he is not entitled to a pension; he is not entitled even to a burial in one of the cemeteries of the Government. He is not entitled after long service to the privileges of the Soldiers' Homes. He is entitled to nothing; while the enlisted men on the one side and those who hold commissions on the other are all provided for.

It seems to me that we are pretty safe when we take a man who has been able for thirty-five years to so perform his duties as to meet the approbation of all his superiors, and say that he has merited selection by the President for appointment to the very low position of a first lieutenant, retired, with pay of that grade. It makes the sum smaller than he would receive if he continued in active service; so that at the end of thirty-five years, if he is able to perform service, he would be liable to serve longer, say, forty or forty-five years, as he could thereby get more in the way of pay than he could by retirement.

It does seem to me heartless, it seems to me almost inhuman, not to permit a man who is the companion of the paymaster, who often shares the same blankets when out in the field, who occupies, sometimes necessarily, the same bed and quarters in different places, and who at every point is subjected to all the expenses of the paymaster, to enjoy the small privilege which is sought to be accorded by the provision in question.

It will affect but a few men. There are only two who can possibly be benefited now. Others, when they have served thirty-five years, will also be able to avail themselves of it. I believe that we ought to accord to this most deserving class the recognition to which they are entitled.

Furthermore it is in the interest of good service. What have you got to put before a man who is the kind of man you wish to have for the position of paymaster's clerk and who frequently acts as paymaster? There is nothing now, but if you put before him as a prize that at the end of long and faithful service he will have at least something for his family, you will get better men and they will do better service.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the same inquiry might be made as to everyone on the civil list of the United States.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no, Mr. President; those on the civil list of the United States are not required to do the things that paymasters' clerks are required to do.

Mr. CLAPP. No; but they are required to do those things which their position demands that they should do; and at the proper time and on consideration as to what relation this pension bears to their present salary Congress has to face the question of a civil pension list and decide it one way or the other. For one I do not believe that in this bill we should establish a precedent that will confront us when we come to deal with that question.

It is late in the day and I do not want to precipitate any discussion. I simply call attention to the nature of this provision, but rather than prolong the discussion I will withdraw the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is withdrawn. Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to offer a very modest amendment to the same portion of the bill as that which contains the amendments already adopted with reference to the erection of certain monuments. The amendment I propose provides for an appropriation of $10,000 for the erection of a monument to Gen. James Scriven, an officer of the Revolutionary Army, who was killed in battle. Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I had almost as lief build that monument myself-

Mr. BACON. I will accept the Senator's proposition. Mr. WARREN. Than to make a point of order against the amendment; but this thing of monuments has gone on, I think, as long as it ought to in this bill. The amendments that have been already accepted are ones that have been passed upon by committees of the Senate, and, indeed, bills containing the same subject-matter have passed the Senate several times; but I think it is perfectly useless, even after admitting the others, to expect that we can get the provision the Senator wishes en-acted into law. I wish the Senator would refrain from offering the amendment and let it come up at some other time, when we can treat it alone and on its merits.

I simply desire to state to the Senator, with his permission, that this amendment proposes a very small appropriation. It provides for the erection of a monument to an propriation. It provides for the erection of a monument to an officer who bore the commission of a general in the Colonial Army and who was killed in battle during the Revolutionary war. Immediately after the Revolutionary war the Congress of the United States proposed to erect a monument to his memory, and a bill for that purpose passed one of the Houses—which one I do not now recollect, but I have sent to the Library for a book which will tell me—but in some way we can not trace what became of the bill ultimately, though it did not become a law.

Of course I do not desire to press this amendment unduly upon this particular bill. I had intended to present it, however, during this session of Congress. It is not a sudden and impulsive action on my part. I have had it in mind during the entire session, and it was only a question as to which bill I should offer it. As amendments providing appropriations for monuments to Revolutionary officers have been put on this bill, I thought this was a particularly good place to offer the amend-I hope the Senator, in view of the facts which I have stated, will accept the amendment; and I will state to the Senator, if he will give me his attention, that if when the bill goes into conference I do not succeed in convincing the committee that it is a meritorious and proper appropriation, I shall not complain if they knock it out.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the amount called for?

Mr. BACON. Only $10,000. I will state that, while I would be glad to have $10,000, if the committee thinks a smaller amount should be given, I would rather have five than not to have any. The truth is that this officer is now buried in a cemetery with no sufficient mark to indicate his place of burial, and it is due, either on this bill or some other, that there should be the recognition of an officer of this kind who was slain in battle—a general officer of the Revolutionary war.

Mr. WARREN. Now, Mr. President, this shows very conclusively that "the way of the transgressor is hard." But if the Senator wishes to reduce the amount to $5,000 I shall not make any opposition.

Mr. BACON. I will reduce it to $5,000, with the understanding that what I said about taking it out in conference is withdrawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

To erect a statue at Midway, Ga., to the memory of Gen. James Scriven, who was killed in battle during the war of the Revolution in an action with the British forces in Liberty County, Ga., $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

NOTICES OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Massachusetts in a moment. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] wishes to give a notice.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to give notice, on behalf of the Judiciary Committee, that to-morrow, after the close of the routine morning business, I or some other member of the committee will ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill

(H. R. 15434) to regulate appeals in criminal prosecutions.

Mr. LODGE. I gave notice that to-day—and that is the reason I rose for recognition—and the notice was printed on the Calendar, I would call up the Philippine bank bill. I have been deprived of any opportunity to do so by the prolonged debate on the Army appropriation bill, and I was about to give notice that I would call it up to-morrow immediately after the routine morning business.

I desire to say to the Senator from Massa-Mr. NELSON. chusetts that last Saturday I gave notice I would call up this bill on Monday, but I have been prevented up to this time from calling it up on account of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. I remember that the Senator gave his notice subsequent to mine.

Mr. NELSON. I gave it before yours, last Saturday. Mr. LODGE. I do not find it on the Calendar.

I desire to say that I shall move to take up the agricultural bank bill as soon as the Senator from Minnesota con-cludes his bill with reference to appeals in criminal cases, which I hope will not take long. As he knows, I am as much interested in it as he is.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I think there ought to be an explanation of this bill. I would like to know what change it makes in the law as it now exists and the necessity for it.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the House that the subject-matter of this bill has passed the House and Senate during the present Congress and was sent the President for approval. The Attorney-General found in it some ambiguities of language that he thought possibly might affect some other statute, and the President notified us that he could not approve the bill in the form that it was before him. bill was withdrawn by resolution of the House and the Senate, and the changes incorporated in the bill herewith reported are those suggested to make clear the points brought up by the Attorney-General and to accomplish the results sought to be accomplished in the former bill on this subject. There is no new matter in it whatever, except simply to make clear what the Congress intended to accomplish in the measure previously passed.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I had in mind the bill that was up on a former occasion, and I supposed it was amendatory of that Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Babcock] say that it does not broaden the scope of the bill that this Congress passed at the last session?

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is explanatory and interpretative of that bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. It simply meets the views of the Attorney-General, in order to make it so clear that there would be no question about its provisions. That is all.

question about its provisions. That is all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is simply to carry into effect more fully the purpose of the bill that was passed before?

Mr. BABCOCK. That is it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I remember of having made a criticism before upon the penalty. It seemed to me that a penalty of a year in jail was pretty severe if a man appropriates a milk bottle worth 5 cents; but a man can avoid the penalty by letting the bottle alone, I suppose.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Yes, sir. Mr. BABCOCK.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. So the bill does not create any new administrative board or board of pharmaceutical examiners. Now, does the present law give the existing board, that has authority to issue licenses to pharmacists, the discretion that this law does in relation to admitting graduates of pharmacy schools to the practice of pharmacy in the District of Columbia?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The exact provision of the present act, which was passed last year, I have not before me, but I believe the only changes between the act of last year and this are explained in this short note of the Commissioners. It provides for this new board, and the act of May 7, 1906, section 3, permitted any graduate of a school or college to take the examination without other practical experience than that furnished by his course in pharmacy. The amendment to section 3 revises the qualifications of applicants: so that four years' practical experience is uniformly required.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now four years' practical experience is required unless the board of pharmacy, in its discretion, shall establish, by general rules, conditions that will admit applicants who have taken a course of instruction in any school or college of pharmacy.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The only discretion left with the board is that they may, if the applicant is a graduate from a regular school of pharmacy, order him to be examined.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, the question is agitated a good deal in the country, and there is a great deal of jealousy and rivalry between pharmacy schools and colleges, and most institutions would question the advisability of vesting absolute discretion in a board of the city of Washington to determine what schools are standard. Does this bill include—and I presume it does, because of its general character-colleges of pharmacy all over the country?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Undoubtedly it is intended to apply to any school that is recognized.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In our own State this identical problem has come to be a subject of controversy. We have a State school of pharmacy

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I understand.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. Which is located in the district which have the honor to represent, and there is a very excellent private school in the city in which I live.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. And they do not get along very well.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And they do not always get along well, because the State inclines to legislation that will promote the interests of the graduates of the State institution, and thereby give an advantage to them over the students of private institutions, and I have been called upon to protest against any further exercise of a power of this kind; but this bill is in general terms, and I suppose both of my schools can take care of themselves under it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I do not think there is any danger about that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What is the purpose of the change that you say this bill makes in creating this board?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. We have a law, passed last year, and it is simply on the advice of the Commissioners and at their request that we pass this, because they put it in practical operation from May last on, and they believe and have stated that with a few amendments which they now favor this new bill will strengthen the machinery. We have taken their word for that, as they have had experience of the operation of the law, and we have taken their judgment as to this change.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The bill provides for a board of supervisors, and in this board is vested all the powers along cer-

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. It is transferred to this other board.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. In relation to pharmaceutical examinations the name and title of the board is changed, and as respects other matters the board of medical directors of the District of Columbia still exists. Now, if you do not create a new board, you subdivide the power. You continue the board of medical examiners, and you take from the existing board certain powers and functions and confer them upon a portion of the board, or another board, and you call that the "board of pharmacy examiners."

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. We separate medicine from pharmacy.

That seems to be the very thing this does. Then it provides for the organization of a board strictly confined to the examination of candidates as pharmacists and leaves the balance of the old pharmacy and medicine board as a medical board, with which this act has nothing to do.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. So that it does not increase the personnel of the board, does not increase its size.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. No; it divides it. Mr. CRUMPACKER. And it provides that a certain portion of its powers shall be conferred upon certain members, who shall be known as the "board of pharmaceutical examiners," and other powers shall be exercised by the balance of the board, which shall be known as the "board of medical examiners."

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. That seems to be the idea. Mr. CRUMPACKER. It does not increase salaries?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Not at all. The fees are provided for exactly as they were in the other act.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The members of the board are paid by fees, are they not?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. By applicants' fees, which are turned in if there is anything left.

Mr. BABCOCK. I call for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

TUBERCULOSIS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21934) to provide for reports and registration of all cases of tuberculosis in the District of Columbia, for free examination of sputum in suspected cases, and for preventing the spread of tuberculosis in said District.

The bill was read, as follows:

spread of tuberculosis in said District.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That tuberculosis is hereby declared to be an infectious and communicable disease, dangerous to the public health. It shall be the duty of every physician in the District of Columbia to report to the health officer of said District, in writing, on forms to be provided by said officer, the name, age, sex, color, occupation, and address of every person in said District having pulmonary or any other communicable form of tuberculosis who has been attended by such physician for the first time within one week after the disease is recognized. It shall also be the duty of the chief officer having charge for the time being of each and every hospital, dispensary, asylum, or other similar public or private institution in said District to report in like manner the name, age, sex, color, occupation, and last address of every patient affilieted with pulmonary or any other communicable form of tuberculosis who is in his care or who has come under his observation within one week of such time.

Sec. 2. That the health officer of the District shall make, or cause to be made, a microscopical examination of the sputum of persons having symptoms of tuberculosis, which shall be accompanied by a blank giving name, age, sex, color, occupation, and address of the patient, whenever it be requested by the attending physician or by the proper officer of any hospital or dispensary; and shall promptly make a report thereof, free of charge, to the physician or officer upon whose application the examination was made.

Sec. 3. That the health officer of the District shall cause all reports made in accordance with the first section and all reports showing the presence of tubercle bacilli received in accordance with the second section of this act to be recorded in a register of which he shall be the custodian and which shall not be open to inspection by anyone outside the health department of said District, and neither said health officer nor anyone co twenty-four hours thereafter, and such apartments or premises shall then be disinfected by the health department at public expense, or, if the owner prefers, by the owner to the satisfaction of the health department, and shall not again be occupied until so disinfected.

Sec. 6. That it shall be the duty of every person afflicted with tuberculosis and of every person in attendance upon anyone afflicted therewith and of the authorities of public and private institutions or dispensaries in said District to observe and enforce all sanitary rules and regulations of the Commissioners of the District for preventing the spread of tuberculosis.

Sec. 7. That upon the recovery of any patient from the tuberculous condition for which he was previously reported a report to that effect to the health department, made by the attending physician, shall be recorded and shall relieve said patient from further liability to any requirements imposed by this act.

Sec. 8. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $25.

Sec. 9. That all prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of said District upon information brought in the name of the District of Columbia and on its behalf.

Sec. 10. That all acts and parts of acts contrary to the provisions of this act, or inconsistent therewith, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1 strike out all of lines 1 and 2 and insert in lieu thereof the words "that it."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill ought to be discussed somewhat. This is quite an important measure and probably a good one, but I read a few days ago in the public press the statement of Doctor Wiley, before one of the committees of the House or Senate, that every individual in the city of Washington in all probability had in his mouth or about him somewhere the germs of tuberculosis; that these germs are common; that they exist everywhere; and if Doctor Wiley is correct in his view of the matter, as he almost always is correct on such questions, the examination of the spulum of any person would be apt to disclose tuberculosis germs. I do not know that this bill interferes with the rights of the citizen, and I do not know what its real purpose is, whether the intent is to assist in eradicating tuberculosis or what its object is. The simple procuring of information, unless that information is put in such form that it can be used scientifically for the benefit of the community, is not a matter of great importance. I should like to hear from the gentleman who reported the bill respecting its real object.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, replying to the questions of the gentleman from Indiana, the object of this bill is to prevent, in so far as it is possible to do so, the spread of consumption.

Briefly stated, the bill provides:

Section 1 provides for the report of the usual details as to cases, but, unlike the laws for contagious diseases, allows one week in which this may be done; and this dates from the time when the disease is recognized, thus providing in a reasonable way against any hardship in the case of mistakes in diagnosis in incipient cases. The second part, providing for reports of cases in institutions, will cover eases not under the care of a physician, and so reach all cases.

In both parts the reports are required only of pulmonary or other communicable form, thus avoiding any injury to the more obscure forms not dangerous or requiring supervision, like some kinds of affections of the joints.

Section 2 provides for the free examination of all specimens of sputum by the health department, when submitted by the attending physician or proper officer of a hospital or dispensary. While this encourages the examination and so promotes an early diagnosis, it fully protects the interests of physicians who do such work by limiting the obligation to samples submitted as above, and leaves the doctor in every case to send the sample to a physician if the patient prefers or if the doctor wishes

It will be noticed that there is no compulsion about having the examination made in this section, as the law in this respect is permissive. The provision is useful in securing early reports in cases of the disease.

Section 3 is very strict in securing privacy of the records, and is in advance of any other law in this respect, as most laws leave this feature to the good judgment of the health department. The provision removes all reasonable objection to allowing the reports to be made. As only a very few cases of any annoyance or hardship to the patient have been found in all the thousands reported in other cities without this safeguard, it seems certain that there will be no trouble in this respect with the law here.

Section 4 guards against any interference by the health de-partment in any case which is being properly taken care of by a physician who requests that the health department take no action in regard to instruction or supervision of it, and at the same time does not restrain the health department from doing what is necessary in any cases where there is no physician or where the public health is endangered or where the physician

Section 5 provides for the disinfecting by the health department of any apartment or premises wherein has occurred a death from tuberculosis upon the vacation of such apartment or premises.

Section 6 provides for the observance of all sanitary rules and regulations of the Commissioners for the prevention of the spread of tuberculosis.

Section 7 provides for the report to the health department by the attending physician of any patient who has recovered from tuberculosis.

Section 8 provides a penalty for violation of this act.

Section 9 provides for the method of prosecution.

Section 10 is the usual repeal clause reserved by Congress.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. A question. Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The bill provides that after a person dies of tuberculosis the premises or house shall not be occupied until disinfected. Suppose a member of a family living at home should die of tuberculosis, and the premises should not be disinfected by the health officers. Would the family be expelled?

fected by the health officers. Would the family be expelled?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, that is a matter, of course, that would have to come under the discretionary control of the administrative officers. At present if an inmate of a house, a member of a family, dies of scarlet fever or diphtheria, the premises are wisely disinfected immediately after the death of the patient. It is wise that for the purpose of preventing the communication of consumption to others every precaution should be taken to fumigate the house or rooms after they have been vacated by one who has had the disease.

Mr. Speaker, tuberculosis, which was formerly supposed to be a hereditary and in most cases a fatal disease, has been shown by the developments of the last twenty-five years, since the discovery of Koch that it was caused by a bacillus, to be communicable and if taken in time to be curable. It is now claimed, although it is communicable, it is not contagious in the ordinary sense of the word, and if proper means can be taken to guard against the infection of others, there is no danger from ordinary association with those affected by the disease.

Most of the large cities of the United States have passed laws requiring that all cases be reported to the health department, so that if any attention is necessary for preventing infection it can be given. The first attempt in this direction was made by New York City in 1894, in which the report of all cases in institutions was required and reports of private cases were requested. Many cases were reported and the results indicated the wisdom of the provision. In 1897 a law was passed requiring the report of all cases of pulmonary tuberculosis, which has since been extended to cover all cases of any form. This law also provided that it should be the duty of every person sick with the disease, and the authorities of private institutions and dispensaries, to observe and enforce all sanitary regulations of the board of health for preventing the spread of pulmonary tuberculosis.

The measure when proposed met with very decided opposition on the part of the medical societies of New York City, but a judicious enforcement has shown the wisdom of it and removed all objections to it, so that now cases are reported as a matter of course, and more than 90 per cent of all those who die from tuberculosis are found to have been previously reported. The death rate since registration was begun has shown a general decline, with some variations, in spite of the increasingly unfavorable conditions in the city, due to the addition to the population each year of about 100,000 foreign born, and often ealmost destitute immigrants, giving a density of population unequaled anywhere in the world. The number of reports made in Greater New York in 1905 was 31,963, and an inquiry of some of the principal physicians practicing under this law indicates its wisdom and efficacy, and they state that they have known of but one or two cases in which any hardship whatever has resulted to patients from such reports.

Other cities have passed similar laws at various dates since, and an investigation of the 86 largest shows that 53 of them have laws requiring the reports of all cases, and that the number enacting such laws has increased rapidly during the last three or four years because of the greater knowledge of the disease and of the necessity of its administrative control. This situation is shown by the table appearing below. All these laws require the reporting of all cases. No city or State has even had a law requiring the report only of indigent cases and cases in institutions, except New York, from 1894 to 1897. Since 1897 New York has required reports of all cases.

The following cities, with an estimated population of more than 8,000 in 1903, on February 20, 1906, had laws requiring reports of all cases of tuberculosis:

a State law. b State law; enforcement in this city begun about this time. By February 20 last the number of cities having compulsory report laws had been increased to 53 out of the 86 largest, as shown by the table.

It appears that in this matter the United States has taken the lead, but its experience is attracting increasing attention in Europe. In March last the local government board of Scotland adopted very thorough measures for the administrative control of tuberculosis and provided for reports of all eases. On October 25, 1906, such a law as this was unanimously adopted by the town council of Glasgow, and on December 18 last the town council of Edinburgh also adopted such a law by a vote of 35 to 3. The necessity of such measures seems to be definitely established by the experience of other large cities of the country.

It seems that one of the most important points in the treatment of the disease is that cases taken in time, in this vicinity as well as elsewhere, show that proper treatment by means of fresh air, nourishing food, and rest will restore most cases to health and usefulness. The most certain method of detecting the disease is by a bacteriological examination of the sputum, and in order to encourage this early diagnosis most of the large cities of the country have for some time provided for the free examination of it, just as provision is made for the detection of diphtheria and other contagious diseases.

The investigation made in connection with this measure

The investigation made in connection with this measure showed that out of the eighty-six largest cities of the United States sixty have a provision for the free examination of sputum in all cases. The number of sputum examinations in New York City last year was 18,639, and physicians there state that this provision is of the greatest usefulness in readily and easily determining whether the disease is present or not; and it often relieves the physician of the responsibility of himself giving a decision which might be unwelcome to the patient.

All the cities of the country larger than Washington have provisions for the free examination of sputum, and of the largest Washington is the only one which is yet without facilities for

This situation is best shown by the following list of cities having such provision, with the population and the rank of Washington in size, and the answers made to the inquiry as to whether there was such a provision or not:

New York, N. Y. (3,437,202): "Full and complete."
Chicago, Ill. (1,698,575): "We examine all specimens sent in by physicians."
Philadelphia, Pa. (1,293,697): "Abundant provision for this. All sputa are examined free of charge."
St. Louis, Mo. (575,238): "All sputum is examined free by the city bacteriologist."
Boston, Mass. (560,892): "Diagnosis of this and bacteriologist."

Boston, Mass. (560,892): "Diagnosis of this and several other diseases made free of expense in our laboratory."

Baltimore, Md. (508,957): "Municipal and State laboratories."
Cleveland, Ohio (381,768): "Any physician can send sputum to the city bacteriological laboratory and have it examined free of charge."
Buffalo, N. Y. (352,387): "All sputum examined free."
San Francisco, Cal. (342,782): "We have a bacteriological laboratory attached to our department where examinations of sputum may be had absolutely free of charge to the doctor."
Cincinnati, Ohio (325,902): "A bacteriologist is employed for the purpose."

Cincinnati, Ohio (325,902): A batteriologist purpose."
Pittsburg, Pa. (321,616): "Yes; all samples sent to laboratory are examined free,"
New Orleans, La. (287,104): Report of board of health shows free examinations of sputum by city bacteriologist.
Detroit, Mich. (285,704): "The analyst and bacteriologist of the board examines gratis all samples of sputum brought to him."
Milwaukee, Wis. (285,315): "Sputum of patients residing in the city analyzed free of charge by health department."
(Washington, D. C., with 278,718, should come in here, but has no such provision.)

In 1900 the 20 largest cities in the United States had a population of 11,971,406. Of these, 16, containing 10,953,081, or 91½ per cent of this population, have laws requiring reports of all cases of tuberculosis, while only 4, having but 1,018,325, or 8½ per cent of the population, among which is Washington, do not have such laws.

Washington should no longer hesitate to do what all the largest cities in the country have found it expedient to do in encouraging the early discovery of this disease, which is so important to the whole community, and should take her proper place among those which make such examinations free to all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The purpose of this bill is simply to establish safeguards for the prevention of the communication of establish safeguards for the prevention of the communication of tuberculosis. I notice there are a couple of typographical errors in the bill. On line 21, page 2, the word "tubercle" is spelled t-u-b-u-e-r-c-l-e, and on page 3, line 16, the word "attending" is spelled a-t-t-e-h-d-i-n-g. Those errors should be corrected. I think the bill is all right, and I believe in any reasonable presention for checking it possible the dead of the contraction. able precaution for checking, if possible, the dread disease, the "white plague," as it has been termed, but I do not have great faith in this kind of a remedy. I am not opposed to the bill, but I think the way to prevent consumption is to develop the individual resisting powers. I have an indefinite idea that tuberculous germs are abundant and exist pretty nearly every-where, and that the remedy is in the resistance of the individual more than in prevention by police regulation, but that does not mean that preventive measures should not be adopted.

Mr. HINSHAW. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly.
Mr. HINSHAW. This bill primarily provides that physicians in the District shall send in a report to the health department of each case of tubercular disease?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes. Mr. HINSHAW. And makes it compulsory on the physician to do so?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does the gentleman know whether statistics show that in the cities where similar precautions and legislation have been adopted the death rate thereby is made any less than it is in a city like Washington?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is claimed that the death rate has decreased, and if the gentleman from Nebraska will turn to the report on this bill he will find a table showing what the claim in these cases is. It is claimed, on the other hand, by those who oppose this bill that it does not in any material sense decrease the disease nor the fatalities from it.

Mr. HINSHAW. Have the physicians in the city of Washington been allowed a hearing before your committee

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They have appeared individually before members of the subcommittee and have filed pamphlets and protests, and we know their position.

Mr. HINSHAW. Their position is against the bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; some of them are, but I refuse to believe that all or a majority of the physicians of the city of Washington are against the provisions of this bill as it is reported by the committee.

Mr. HINSHAW. Has any physician in the city appeared in favor of this bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not recall that there has.

I have hoped that I would not be called into a discussion of this phase of the case. The attitude of the medical fraternity toward this class of legislation is not friendly, and I have some very pronounced views on their attitude.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Let me say to the gentleman that it is not the attitude of the profession generally. You may find it in this city, but, generally, the medical profession is in favor of this kind of legislation. If it does no other good it will cause the attending physician to be careful with his patient and take care of the expectoration and do those things which will have a tendency to prevent the spread of the disease. I think it is a very wise thing to do and very important that it should be done. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUM-PACKER] said that Doctor Wiley said that in the mouth of almost every human being could be found tuberculous germs. That may be so accidentally; but if all of the disease germs which could be found in our mouths should develop we should all be dead in a week. It depends upon the amount of resisting force we have to get rid of them. They are constantly with us, ready to make an invasion, and this kind of legislation is very wise and, I think, should be passed by all means. not think it is any too strict.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I thank the gentleman from Delaware, who is a most noted physician himself.

Mr. HINSHAW. Any method of preventing the spread of tuberculosis should be adopted if adapted to the purpose, but it strikes me as peculiar, since it has been made manifest that the physicians of the city are opposed to it, and I could not understand why, because I should believe naturally they would be in favor of restrictive measures when it came to the spread of this disease.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will say for the medical societies here, as they have been represented to the members of the committee who have had the bill under consideration, that they are in favor of reporting such cases as do not come under their

It is the contention of the medical society that when a case is called to their attention it is in hands sufficiently qualified to make all investigations and examinations of sputum and to give all necessary instruction to the patient and to give every encouragement and help that a patient with consumption should have. They do say that cases which do not come under their treatment should be reported and taken care of as provided for in this bill.

Mr. HINSHAW. It was suggested to me by one citizen that one objection to the bill was that it puts down upon the records of the department here against a particular patient a record of tuberen'esis, which would therefore follow that patient even though he might recover, and that life insurance companies possibly might have access to that record and that record might will take against the chances of the patient getting life insurance. Various other objections were made because they contend that a large number of these patients do ultimately recover, and do not like to have the record made against them.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Provision is made for the record to show recovery when there is recovery. The physicians here have not had formal hearings, but their case has been given full consideration in the preparation of this bill and the report on it. The provisions of this bill practically as it has been reported have been in operation in the city of New York for about ten years now, and I will yield a few moments to the gentle-man from New York [Mr. Olcott] with a view of having him state how it works there.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, in connection with this matter would say that I have had considerable conversation with Dr. Hermann H. Biggs, who is the general medical officer of the city of New York. This system of the free examination of sputum and of the registration of all tuberculosis patients has been in operation in New York City for a considerable length of time and has been of highly beneficial results. I, of course, not being a physician, can do nothing better than to ask the clerk to read the letter which I send to the desk which I have received from Doctor Biggs, as to the effect of a similar law in the city of New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

CITY OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, January 25, 1907.

Hon. J. Van Vechten Olcott,

The Capitol, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: I am informed that bill H. R. 21934, relating to the compulsory reporting of cases of tuberculosis and the free examination of sputum for the city of Washington is in charge of the District Committee of the House, of which you are a member, and I am writing to most earnestly urge the favorable reporting of this bill by your committee.

It has been my privilege to have the supervision of this work in the city of New York for many years. In 1894 the board of health, on my recommendation, first provided for the free examination of sputum and the partially voluntary and partially compulsory reporting of cases of tuberculosis. In 1897 an ordinance was passed declaring this disease to be a communicable one, dangerous to the public health, and requiring reports of all cases. You will readily understand that when we took up this work in New York City, thirteen or fourteen years ago, the scientific knowledge in regard to the subject was far less complete than it is now, and both the medical profession and the laity were without information as to the actual facts, and it seemed wise then to follow the course suggested. At the present time there is absolutely no valid objection in any civilized community to the passage and enforcement of such regulations, which are absolutely necessary for the protection of the public health and even more so in Washington than in New York, because of the great susceptibility to and the prevalence of tuberculosis among the negroes.

Notwithstanding the very dense population which we have in New York on the lower east side, running from 600 to 1,000 to the acremuch the densest population of any city in the world—and notwith-standing the enormous and almost insuperable difficulties in the education of our tenement-house population, because of their foreign birth and training and inability to understand English, it has been possible, by the procedures which we have adopted, to reduce the death rate from tuberculosis fully 35 per cent in the period since the work was begun. When I say that there is not one single valid objection to the adoption of such regulations I speak with full knowledge of the subject, as I was responsible for the introduction of these regulations in New York City and have had the supervision of them since that time. Last year nearly 31,000 cases of tuberculosis were reported to the department of health.

I sincerely trust that for the good of the people of Washington and for the general reputation of the economic tention and the prov

I sincerely trust that for the good of the people of Washington and for the general reputation of the national capital, the House committee will see its way to reporting favorably on this bill and urging its passage.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, yours.

Hermann M. Biggs,

General Medical Officer.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I wish at this time to offer two amendments to correct the spelling of two words in the bill. On page 2, line 21, correct the spelling of the word "tubercle;" and on page 3, line 16, correct the spelling of the word "attending."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendments indicated by the gentleman from Kansas will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas two or three questions about this Who wants this bill, anyway?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. We have here the petition of the council of the Civic Center Society, who have petitioned for the passage of the bill. The board of health wants it, and the District Commissioners want it, and many citizens have called upon the subcommittee in support of the bill and have asked that it be reported favorably and passed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What do the doctors say about it?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The doctors are pretty generally against the passage of this bill as it has been reported.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They want a substitute passed that will not be so stringent?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; they want a substitute passed. They want to give homeopathic treatment, as it were, where we would give allopathic treatment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does that in any way interfere with the management of his own affairs of any man keeping house in this town a member of whose family is supposed to have consumption?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I contend that it in no way interferes with the family in that way. In New York City they have been trying to devise a way in which they could interfere in proper cases, but have not yet been able to do so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the provision in this bill as to the registration of these cases

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The bill requires that an attending physician, believing or having reason to believe that he is attending a patient who has tuberculosis, is required to have an examination made of the sputum at public expense by the health officer. Having ascertained that the patient has tuberculosis, that physician is required to report that case to the health officers

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is that to be registered in a public place?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not in a public place. The registration is for the information of the health department, and every safeguard is placed around it. It is only for the information of the health office.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, is one doctor to be permitted to certify up there that I have consumption or that you or anybody else has it?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No: he may certify his suspicions, but one is not registered as a consumptive until an examination of the sputum has been made which shows conclusively that he has the disease, and then registration is made Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They compel the examination. Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Of the sputum-well, I should

Mr. CAMPBELL of Say that it is not compulsory. say that it is not compulsory. Well, I dislike exceedingly to have

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. "Shall make or cause to be made an examination" is the language of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Say that anybody had consumption, or tuberculosis, I believe, is the technical name for it. I know of a case where one doctor said a boy had incipient tuberculosis and there is not a healthier boy in the city of Washing-Well, now, my judgment about it is that a man would not like to have his wife or himself or his child certified in a public record that they have tuberculosis unless it is a clear case. Of course, there is nothing disgraceful about having tuberculosis, but it might work a great many bad results if you are registered as having it.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I want to ask if your friend in that case had his sputum examined?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No, he did not; but there is not a healthier boy in the city of Washington.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. That diagnosis would have been avoided probably in that very case had the doctor submitted his sputum to the proper kind of an examination.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You know ten times as much about medicine as I do, but I know the common-sense idea about it is this: People who have good sense when they come to marry consider the antecedents of the person they are going to marry as to health, insanity, and all that kind of stuff. Now, you take girl down here, or a boy either, it does not matter which, a child, and register them in a public register as having tuberculosis and it turns out that they do not have it, it might interfere very materially with the prospect of that girl or boy in regard to their marrying or getting on generally, and marrying is one of the most important functions people discharge in this life now. Another thing about it—there is a great dispute in life now. the world whether consumption can be cured at all or not. Now, if it was ascertained definitely that it can be cured, then it would not make so much difference if a person accidentally had his name registered as consumptive

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. It has been demonstrated— Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But if it is admitted it is an incurable disease, then to have the name of a child put on a public record as having an incurable disease I do not think it-

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. It has not been demonstrated that it is incurable. The fact is, it has been demonstrated beyond the question of doubt that it can be cured, and the earlier the disease is recognized the better the chances of curing it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman answer a question? Is it not true that nearly every person at some time or other in life has consumption, in the sense that there is an attack by the germ, but a healthy person is capable of throwing it off and curing it without any disastrous results?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. That is true.

Mr. SHERLEY. If that be true, is it not possible that a person then might be registered as having consumption who would not have it in the sense in which it would be considered by the public?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Well, but he has the opportunity to go and be examined afterwards and be registered as cured and as free from tuberculosis, and it is his duty to do so.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman, however, will realize this fact, that while the medical profession may recognize that a man may have it and be cured, the general public look upon it as a disease not capable of cure, and once being noted as having consumption would carry to the lay mind the idea that the person always has it.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I understand that; but do you not know there are hundreds of cases that are diagnosed as tuberculosis when an examination would reveal the fact that there was no tuberculosis? So far as I am concerned, in my practice many times in my life the diagnosis of a case would disclose the patient had tuberculosis, but if I had some doubt I would go to another place and get a report on the sputum, showing that it was entirely free from the germs of tuberculosis.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's statement brings forward an additional argument. If there is so much doubt as to whether or not a person has tuberculosis, a doubt that exists among the members of the medical profession, then is it not going a little far to say upon the statement of a health officer that a man shall be certified as having it, when he might not have it at all?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. That is just the point. They can do to bliged to stop there. They can go to another scientist are not obliged to stop there. and have it examined again.

Mr. SHERLEY. Upon the opinion of whom does the certification depend?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to read section 2 of the bill in answer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clark] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. It is as follows:

Sec. 2. That the health officer of the District shall make, or cause to be made, a microscopical examination of the sputum of persons having symptoms of tuberculosis, which shall be accompanied by a blank giving name, age, sex, color, occupation, and address of the patient, whenever it be requested by the attending physician or by the proper officer of any hospital or dispensary; and shall promptly make a report thereof, free of charge, to the physician or officer upon whose application the examination was made.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is the contention of the committee and those favoring this legislation that this examination made by a proper officer discloses the fact as to whether or not the person has or has not consumption, and the examination is in the nature of a protection to him.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, that is hardly in accordance with the statement made by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Burron], that it is a matter of doubt among physicians frequently. Now, you are permitting one man's certificate to determine the matter.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; we are permitting here the certificate of the officer who has made a microscopical investigation of sputum to determine the matter, just as we permit the same officer to decide whether or not a child has scarlet fever or diphtheria to-day. There seems to be no question among medical men that it can be ascertained definitely whether there is tubercular bacilli in the sputum or not.

Mr. SHERLEY. I simply appeal from the gentleman's statement to the statement made by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Burton], who is himself a physician.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No doubt the gentleman from Delaware has reference to his own examinations, not as a specialist making an examination of the sputum, but as a physician giving his opinion upon the case.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. No, Mr. Speaker; I contend that the ordinary physician would diagnose a case as tuberculosis, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] said a while ago, when an examination by a scientist would have shown that it was not tuberculosis, and had that examination not been made the patient would have nothing to show that he had recovered and was now a healthy man. It is a protection to the patient as well as to the public.

Mr. SHERLEY. The point I desire to bring out is this: As I understand it—of course I do not pretend to have accurate knowledge in regard to the matter—all of us may at times be infected with the germ that produces tuberculosis, but the system itself is capable of coping with the disease and throws it off, so that it does not become acute or chronic, and the result is that that person is not a consumptive in the ordinary sense of Otherwise all of us would be; and yet under the prothe term. visions of this bill such a person might be registered. Now, the fact that subsequently the registration can be canceled by the statement that the person is cured does not put him back in the position he would have been in if he had never been registered, because in the lay mind there is always an idea that consumption, differing from the diseases mentioned by the gentleman, is incurable, and is also capable of being transmitted, and as a result the stigma would be one that could never be gotten rid of.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. The gentleman will admit that that same condition of things would exist in connection with the physician who denominates maybe a hundred cases as tuberculosis where there never was an examination, and it goes out all over the community that a man so examined has consumption and has still got it, because the average man believes it incurable. Now, the statement of Dr. Wiley, that it can be found in the sputum or in the mouth of men, does not prove that the system is infected with it or that it has made any inroads, for every day of our lives, no doubt, we drink the typhoid germ, and it is probably by the antiseptics that we put in our stomachs we fight off the disease. Three of us might to-day take the typhoid germ into our systems, and one might be a victim of it in a week, and another man in two weeks, and another man in three months. The latter would fight it off until it finally exhausted his vital force. You can not claim a man has consumption because of the undeveloped tuberculosis germ that is found in the mouth.

Mr. SHERLEY. And yet upon the ascertainment that the germ is in the sputum this is to be done.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. The gentleman does not understand. That is the expectoration. A man has a cough. You take that sputum that he expectorates from the lungs and have that examined. It is not simply saliva or what you may find it, and you spit that out or you chew it out or smoke it out or kill it by alcohol or tobacco or anything else. It is not the germ that you find in the mouth or you find in the stomach or throat, but is the germ that is found in the sputum that is often expectorated from the lungs. It is an expectoration of germs from tuberculous ulcers. There are a great many cases, when there is profuse expectoration, of at least a suspicious character, but examination shows it to be harmless. Now, I had one that came home very close to me. My brother was very ill. He had grip, and in cases of grip we frequently find occasions of profuse expectoration, and he was expectorating very great quantities of ugly sputum. I called in a physician, and he stated that there was no question that it was tuberculous. I did not believe that it was. My belief was that it was simple sputum of diffused it was. bronchitis, profuse, as we often find in cases of epidemic influenza, and an examination by scientists proved that it was not tuberculous, and the man got well, and he is as well as he ever

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I call for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker—— . Mr. COUSINS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Delaware a question. Do you regard the existence of universal pavements in the city as more likely to cause an exhalation of this tuberculous matter than if the pavement did not exist and the sputum fell on the ground, and whether there would be less liability of its rising than there is now?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Decidedly so.

Mr. COUSINS. And is it the opinion of physicians that it is in the very dryest state that this sputum is the most dangerous?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Yes. When it falls on a pavement it dries more rapidly, and is also less likely to meet with an enemy than it would be if it fell upon clay or soil where other germs are often found to destroy it.

Mr. COUSINS. That it becomes pulverized and rises in the

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. It rises in the air. A person expectorates on the carpet and it dries and rises in the dust.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be ordered to be engrossed, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, quite a number of gentlemen are interested in the bill just passed by the Chair—I mean nothing unkind in reference to the action of the Chair—and some of us desired to be heard, and I did not know that debate was

The SPEAKER. The Chair was notified that a vote was called for by a member of the committee, and the Chair stated that if there was no objection the bill would be passed, nor was there objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I called for a vote. After that some questions were asked on the bill, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett] had asked me to yield to him for a question.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent the House can vacate its action. Is there objection? Mr. BABCOCK. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

PROHIBITION OF DISTRIBUTION OF ADVERTISING MATTER.

Mr. BABCOCK. I call up for consideration the bill H. R. 24930.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24930) prohibiting the distribution of circulars and certain other advertising matter on private property within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or company or association of any character to throw, push, cast, deposit, drop, scatter, or leave, within the building line, vestibule, or yard of any premises within the District of Columbia any paper, handbills, dodgers, cards, circulars, or advertising matter of any kind whatsoever: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall be construed to interfere with the distribution of newspapers or any class of mall matter in the ordinary course of mail delivery: And provided further. That nothing herein shall be taken to modify, annul, or repeal the power to make police regulations heretofore given the Commissioners of the District of Columbia by Congress, nor any present or future police regulation prohibiting deposits upon parks, parking, streets, avenues, or alleys, or other public space.

Sec. 2. That no person, firm, corporation, or company or association of any character shall do or employ any other person, firm, corporation, or company or association of end or perform any one or more of the things forbidden by section 1 of this act, or by any present or future police regulation mentioned in the provisos thereof; and any such person, firm, corporation, or company or association of any character, whether acting as employer or employee, as principal or agent, either directly or indirectly, shall be liable for a violation of any provision of this act.

Sec. 3. That any person, firm, corporation, or company or association of any character, whether acting as employer or employee, as principal or agent, either directly or indirectly, shall be liable for a violation of any provision of this act.

Sec. 3. That any person, firm, corporation, or company or association of any character, whether acting any of the provisions

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest an amendment to this bill.

Mr. GREENE. I have an amendment I desire to offer on behalf of the committee

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "delivery," insert the following:
"Or with the orderly delivery upon the premises of printed or written advertisements inclosed in an envelope addressed to some person in the house or to the man or lady of the house."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill would prevent the custom that generally prevails throughout the city of Washington of making social calls by leaving cards-the ordinary visiting cards. I do not think that very admirable and convenient practice ought to be prohibited.

Mr. BABCOCK. Does the gentleman consider that advertis-

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The provision is not limited to advertising matter. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the phraseology of the bill:

It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or company or association of any character to throw, push, cast, deposit, drop, scatter, or leave within the building line, vestibule, or yard of any premises within the District of Columbia any paper, handbills, dodgers, cards, circulars, or advertising matter of any kind whatsoever.

These enumerated things are not necessarily of an advertising character. The depositing of a calling card on the front porch would be on the premises and within the building line. I think, at the end of line 7, a word should be added, so it would read "handbills, dodgers, cards, circulars, or 'other' advertising matter of any kind."

Mr. BABCOCK. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. "Papers, dodgers, handbills, cards, circulars, or other advertising matter."

Mr. BABCOCK. I have no objection to that. Submit the amendment to the Clerk.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand that These enumerated things are not necessarily of an advertis-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand that this is an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; I move to amend by adding, after the word "or," in line 7, page 1, the word "other." The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "or" and before the word "advertising," on line 8, page 1, the word "other;" so as to read: "or other advertising matter."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first amendment was the one proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on that amend-GREENE]. ment?

Mr. GREENE I do not think it is necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment of Mr. Greene was agreed to.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUM-PACKER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and

WASHINGTON WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to all up Senate bill 7042, which was called up when we adjourned on last District day and is on the Union Calendar.

Which bill is that? Mr. SIMS.

Mr. BABCOCK. The Washington Aqueduct bill?

That is on the Union Calendar? Mr. SIMS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; I just said that it is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SIMS. What about H. R. 25326?

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged and that Senate bill 7042 may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill mentioned and that it now be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERLEY, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made by the gen-the Union for the consideration of bills on the Calendar reported by the District Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill 7042

Mr. BABCOCK. No, Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For the consideration of bills on the Union Calendar reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a parliamentary inquiry, whether there is going to be any general debate fixed on this bill before we go into the Committee of the Whole House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; let it run. The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can be agreed to only by unanimous consent, the Chair will state to the gentleman from The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Union Calendar reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, with Mr. Grosvenor in the chair.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the present consideration of Senate bill 7042, to transfer jurisdiction of the Washington Aqueduct, the filtration plant, and appurtenances to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after July 1, 1907, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have all the powers and be subject to all the duties and limitations which under existing law are delegated to and imposed upon the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army in so far as the same relate to the jurisdiction and control over the Washington Aqueduct and its appurtenances in the District of Columbia, State of Virginia, and State of Maryland; and the said Commissioners are hereby given sole control over the Conduit road and the filtration plant, it being the intention of this act that the entire control over the Washington Aqueduct and all of its appurtenances, the filtration plant, Conduit road, all water mains, and the water-distribution system of the District of Columbia shall, on and after said date, be under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction and control of the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and that the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers of the United States Army shall be relieved of all duty and responsibility in connection with all of such work; and the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers shall, on request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, deliver to them all existing plans, surveys, and records, or duly certified copies thereof, deemed necessary or required by said Commissioners to enable them to discharge the duties imposed on them by this act, the cost of making said copies to be paid by said Commissioners; and all property connected with said works shall be delivered to said Commissioners; and all appropriations available for the Washington Aqueduct, District of Columbia, and its appurtenances, including the filtration plant, shall be expended under the direction and control of the Commissioners of said District, and the employees paid from said appropriation shall be transferred to the jurisdiction of the said Commissioners for assignment to such duties as may be deemed necessary to carry into effect the

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, that was the first reading of the bill. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin going to explain it?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is now open for general debate. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to know whether the gentleman from Wisconsin intends to explain this bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I should be very glad to have an opportunity to explain the bill fully, and for that purpose I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR], who

mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the waterworks system of the District of Columbia has been partly under the control of the War Department and partly under the control of the District Commissioners. The dam at Great Falls, the aqueduct, the reservoir, and the filtration plant and a portion of the trunk mains have been under the control of the War Department. The balance of the water mains and the machinery of distribu-tion are under the control and direction of the District Commissioners. This bill simply seeks to consolidate that entire water system under one control. The District Commissioners have advocated it on grounds of economy, and the War Department are anxious to get rid of the authority they hold over this portion of the waterworks By the original act, which was passed a long time ago, the War Department had control of the aqueduct tleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the water and distribute it. This is all there is to the bill.

There is nothing behind it, except to turn over the control of the entire system to one body.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Certainly

Mr. MANN. This involves the filtration plant?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Yes.

Does it involve the reservoir? Mr. MANN. Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Yes; and the aqueduct.

Mr. MANN. All of that which has been constructed under the control of the engineers of the War Department?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Under the control of the War Department engineers.

Mr. MANN. You now propose to turn it over to the District Commissioners?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. To the District, and that such funds as are used by the War Department for the purpose shall be put into the hands of the Commissioners. In other words, that one party will control the whole water system.

Mr. MANN. Is there not some talk about enlarging the water supply of the District?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I know of no such talk beyond the fact that they have just finished a large filtration plant and there is now pending a bill to construct a small auxiliary filtration plant, I think involving an expenditure of about $5,000.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Ohio is aware that it is stated here by the committees having jurisdiction that it will be necessary to enlarge the water supply or decrease the water consumption within the very near future?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I know that they have recently adopted the meter system, or rather I am so informed. Doubtless that will save water and the cost of production.

Mr. MANN. They are also asking additional methods of water supply.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Not in this bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; not in this bill. These things come in by piecemeal.

I know nothing about that. Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio.

Mr. MANN. What is the reason for the Engineering Department of the Government, which has constructed a filtration plant, having it in hand and having the capacity and the force to look after it—what is the reason for turning it over to the District Commissioners, who know nothing about that subject?
Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. In the first place, I do not agree with the gentleman from Illinois that the District Commissioners or their agents having charge of the water system of Washington do not know about the source of the water supply. It seems absolutely necessary to a successful operation that they should know about the water supply. The letter from the District Commissioners states the fact, and it seems unanswerable, that a water system controlled by two bodies, one portion of it under the control of the War Department and the other portion under the control of the District, could not be as economically managed as the same system consolidated and controlled by one governmental body.

Mr. HULL. Wouldn't it be more economical to put it all under the War Department?

TAYLOR of Ohio. I might say to the gentleman that the War Department is pretty busy managing the real duties of that Department without becoming the District water-supply

Mr. HULL. I do not know much about it, but I am seeking for information. My impression was that it was economy for it to be administered in the way it is.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman from Iowa understands that the War Department has assented to the provisions of this bill? Mr. HULL. No; I was not aware of it; I am trying to find

Mr. BABCOCK. They are in favor of the legislation. Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. In the report we have a letter from the Chief of Engineers and also an indorsement of the approval of Secretary Taft, together with a letter from the Commissioners, fully explaining what they think would be an economical administration of the water system. It is an agreed matter between the Department and the Commissioners, and we are seeking only to acquiesce and carry it out.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for another question? Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. HALLOR of Onio. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. If the purpose of this is economy, I want to suggest to the gentleman that there are other matters for economical administration. For instance, we have a large number of little parks belonging to the General Government. It is very costly to have those policed by the War Department.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Has the District Committee ever brought in a

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I do not know whether the committee has ever brought in a bill to change it, but it has not since I have been a member of the committee.

Mr. MANN. If they have it has not been passed? Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. It has not been passed.

Mr. MANN. There are some reasons in this case that could easily be given why the Government should retain control of the water supply and not turn it over to the District Commissioners.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. They do not give up the title to the property, only transfer the administration.

Mr. MANN. The title does not make any difference, they turn over the control from the Engineer Department of the War Department. They turn these matters over to the District office, as though it was a mere matter of registering the water by meters. As a matter of fact, it is quite a different proposi-

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Under the present system there are now of necessity a number of positions duplicated by reason of the two jurisdictions. That could be done away with, and that is, of course, a matter of economy. Because the park system may be in the minds of the gentleman and myself wrong, in that the Department employs policemen for the parkings, I do not see that that is any reason why this bill should not pass because of the committee's failure to bring in a bill correcting the other extravagance.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason we want to know why the committee selects one and not the other.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The only answer I could give to that lies in the fact that the Commissioners and the War Department have called this matter to our attention and have urged this legislation. I have no recollection of having the other thing urged upon us.

Mr. MANN. What positions are duplicated?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. They are not given in sequence, but the statement is this: That considerable economy will result from their administration of the aqueduct and the filtration plant, as a number of employees now necessarily duplicated on account of the division of the work could be dropped. I do not know what positions are referred to, but I can readily see why there would be a duplication.

Mr. MANN. I will offer to give the gentleman a valuable chromo if this bill passes and he can find a single case or person that is dropped

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Then it is the fault of the District Commissioners, and they and not the committee should receive the criticism. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill be laid asidewith a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in opposition to this bill. It seems to me that the committee should consider this bill somewhat carefully before it lays it aside with a favorable recommendation. The Commissioners have for several years urged the Committee on Appropriations to turn over the aqueduct and the filtration plant to their control. At present the aqueduct and filtration plant are under the control of the engineers of the War Department. The administration of the service is satisfactory and the evidence shows that it is more economical than it would be in any other way. Federal Government built the aqueduct and between the years 1850 and 1879 paid all the expenses of maintaining it. In that period there were expended $3,800,000 for that purpose. It is important that the Federal Government should have control of the water supply in this city. There is no more important function for the Federal Government in connection with the District than to have control of the water system. This movement did not originate, as I am informed, with the War Department, but it originated with the Commissioners of the District, who in all of the hearings simply assert that in their opinion it would tend to better and more economic administration. In my experience I am convinced that the economic administration of this service will be conserved by continuing it in the control of the engineers of the War Department. If there be any necessity to consolidate the control of the water-supply system in this District it would be better, in my opinion, to place the control of that part of it now under the Commissioners of the District with the engineers of the War Department. The Secretary of War has not specifically approved this project. has simply returned the proposed bill with a recommendation that the committee's attention be given to the recommendations of his subordinate officials. They suggest that there is no objection to the bill. One of these officials, Captain Cosby, suggests that it might be a proper matter for consideration that the District should pay, if it is to have the entire control of the water system, at least one-half of the amount that was expended prior to 1879. In my judgment the result of this bill, if enacted into law, will be to gradually increase the cost of maintenance without any advantage whatever to anyone desiring a better or a more efficient water supply. It seems to me that before the aqueduct, which was built and paid for by the Federal Government, and the filtration plant, which has been paid one-half by the Federal Government and one-half by the District (but which has always been controlled in an economical manner by the engineers of the War Department) are put into the control of the Commissioners more forcible reasons should be given than those assigned in advocacy of this bill. There is no special haste, there is no pressing necessity for this legislation, and I trust that the committee will not, with the meager explanation given, approve the bill.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, 1 Mr. Chairman, I regret that I can not agree with my distinguished colleague from New York. I am heartily in favor of the passage of this bill as recommended by the committee, and it seems to me that the reasons assigned by the Commissioners and the officials of the War Department, as found in the report of the committee, are ample and satisfac-I find these views set forth in that document, taken from the report of President Macfarland, of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia:

The conditions which then seemed to make it advisable to terminate the dual responsibility for the water supply of the District exists to-day, and the recommendation is renewed. The completion of the filtration plant will give an added reason for the transfer, as its maintenance and operation are even more intimately connected with the distribution system than is the aqueduct itself.

There seems to be a division of authority here that should not exist in a well-regulated department of this character. division of authority and responsibility is certainly not in the interest of good, economical administration of affairs. The Commissioner goes on to say:

At present the dam at Great Falls, the aqueduct and reservoir along the route, the filtration plant, and a portion of the trunk mains are under the control of the War Department, and the high-service reservoirs, the pumping station, the greater part of the trunk mains, and all the distributing system are under the Commissioners.

The Condult road, running from Great Falls to the city, is now placed by law under the control of the War Department, and by reason of the lack of jurisdiction of the Commissioners over this road they are unable to light it, to lay sidewalks, service mains, and service sewers without special authorization from Congress. They are at present only authorized to carry on such improvement on highways under their jurisdiction, and as a number of these municipal constructions involve assessments on abutting property such assessments if levied would not be collectible against the property. The necessity for these improvements as the property develops is evident.

Now. I am familiar with the Conduit road: I have been over

Now, I am familiar with the Conduit road: I have been over it several times. Some friends have built residences there; another one has erected a church on this thoroughfare, and it is impossible for them to obtain any public improvements-water, gas, electricity, pavements, etc.—unless this bill becomes law. I hope, therefore, in the interest of economy which seems clearly demonstrated, in the interest of a better administration of affairs, in the interest of improvements which are absolutely necessary in that rapidly growing section, that this bill will pass and the recommendation of the committee be adopted.

The arguments against it by the gentlemen from New York
[Mr. Fitzgerald] and from Illinois [Mr. Mann] are not sound nor in the interest of good government.

The bill, Senate No. 7042, having passed that body and been reported favorably by the District Committee, should speedily be enacted into law, and I believe will receive the approval of this House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished Commissioners have tried for a long time to get control of this aqueduct. It was kept under the jurisdiction of the War Department because it was believed the War Department was better qualified to run it economically than the District Commis-The War Department believes that it should be allowed to retain jurisdiction over the source of the water supply for reasons which it gave the Committee on Appropriations, namely, that while it had control it was sure that the Government would never have onerous conditions placed upon its use of what water supply the Government needs. The Committee on Appropriations obtained information to the effect that greater economy was practiced in the operation of the aqueduct by the War Department than was practiced by the Commissioners over that part of the water supply which they control. The filtration plant, which is under the jurisdiction of the War Department, is much more economically administered than is that part of the water system under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District. The judgment of the Committee on Appropriations was that the best interests of all the people of the District would be served by allowing the War Department to retain the jurisdiction which it has had for many years.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. BABCOCK.

Certainly.

I desire to call his attention to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations had no authority under the rules of the House to report legislation.

Mr. MADDEN. It realizes that and it is not attempting to do so. And I am only making an explanation of how we came into possession of the information which led to the conclusion that the work could be done more economically by the War Department than by the District Commissioners. We necessarily were obliged to go into the details of how many men were employed, why they were employed, and the duties they were required to perform in connection with that service, and it was evident to us that the War Department had much better control over the men employed by them and were able to administer their affairs much more economically than the Commissioners of the District, and it seemed to us that business prudence dictated the wisdom of leaving this matter under the control of the War Department, and it seems to me now there is no good reason why the transfer should be made to the District Commissioners and that there is every reason why it should not be.

Mr. OLCOTT. Does the gentleman understand that the Commissioners are absolutely prohibited from taking care of the highways which lead out in that direction?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. OLCOTT. That they have not any control over them and the War Department has no control over it and that part of the city must be left without necessary facilities in regard to public utilities owing to the fact of these divided responsibilities?

Mr. MADDEN. That matter was all gone over in the investigation which was made by the subcommittee on appropriations of the District, and after all explanations which were made it was still the judgment of the subcommittee that jurisdiction ought not to be given to the District Commissioners.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to question the gentleman in charge of the bill. I note in the letter of the Acting Chief of Engineers that he suggests that inasmuch as the cost was borne entirely by the Government for many years of this aqueduct, whether if it is to be transferred there should not be a payment by the District of a portion of that sum? I fail to note anything in the bill carrying out that suggestion.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. That is a mere suggestion of the engineer wanting to know if the Government should not be reimbursed. There is nothing in the bill looking to such reim-

Mr. SHERLEY. That mere suggestion, as the gentleman puts it, seems to me to be an exceedingly wise one, and I would like to know whether the committee considered the advisability of having part of this sum repaid.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. To the Government? Mr. SHERLEY. To the Government.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. It certainly did not intend it should The bill has provided nothing for carrying that sug-

Mr. SHERLEY, What reason has the gentleman to give why it should not be? The equities all seem to point that way according to the statement made by the engineer.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Well, the engineer's statement does not carry any more weight to the committee as to reimburse-ment—I never heard of a case where old matters turned over by the Government were paid for.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is rare when the Government gets any-

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Why break the rule?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is high time we were breaking that custom, and I would suggest to the gentleman that here is a splendid opportunity

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I have not any doubt if the bill were brought in by a proper committee, asking that a certain sum be appropriated, the gentleman would have a chance to discuss it, but I do not think it germane at this point.

Mr. SHERLEY. Would the gentleman be willing to have the bill recommitted until that very important feature of it could be considered in connection with its passage?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. No; I would not, personally.
Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman think we ought to give up control and then make our claims afterwards?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. If there is anybody going to make a claim. I do not assume they will. I think the purpose for which the bill was introduced was exactly right, to transfer the authority and control, and the question of reimbursement does not enter into it at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 2, insert: "Provided, That there shall be transferred to the credit of the United States from the revenues of the District of Columbia the sum of $1,902,168.43."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the sum mentioned in the proposed amendment is one-half of the sum that was paid by the Federal Government for maintenance of the aqueduct prior to the time when the District of Columbia shared the expense.

Mr. OLCOTT. Does not the gentleman believe that he ought to add the interest from 1850 to 1879 on that money?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is that the gentleman's question?

Mr. OLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will explain my position, and if the gentleman is not satisfied with it he can go further and provide for the payment of interest. Evidently the amendment does not impress him very favorably. I believe that the people of the District of Columbia, those who reside here, who have onehalf of the expenses of its government paid from the Federal Treasury, are obtaining sufficient benefits without having donated to them this aqueduct and filtration plant. It is a notorious fact that not only are the taxes upon real estate in the District of Columbia extraordinarily low, but that nearly all of those classes of property that would be taxed in any other community under the personal-tax law are free from taxation here. Some gentlemen imagine that they should go out of their way to continue further to donate improvements or to relieve the taxpayers of the District from their obligations. clined to believe that we should at least take some steps to compel them to pay a fair share of the burdens of the District The sum that is mentioned in this item is one-half government. of the maintenance charges of the Federal Government from 1850 to 1879. If Congress is now to turn over the control of this plant to the District government, it seems only equitable, as recommended by Captain Cosby, of the Corps of Engineers, that a portion of this sum should be paid by the District, and I suggest that one-half be paid, because that is the percentage that the Federal Government pays of all of the expenditures made in the District for the maintenance of the government I take it that nobody can object to the people of the District of Columbia continuing to pay at least a fair portion of the cost of maintaining the government or of obtaining these improvements.

May I interrupt the gentleman? Mr. MUDD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MUDD. I am asking for information, because it has been some time since I was a member of this committee, and I do not know; but I would like to know who has been paying the expenses of this aqueduct all of these years?

Mr. FITZGERALD. From 1850 to 1879 the Federal Government paid all of the expense, amounting to $3,800,000. that time the expense has been borne half by the District and half by the Federal Government.

Mr. MUDD. Since what year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Since 1879. But this bill contemplates transferring to the control of the District Commissioners the aqueduct and filtration plant. The aqueduct was not only maintained by the Federal Government during those years, but the cost of building it was paid for entirely out of the Federal It does not seem unreasonable that the people of Treasury. the District should at least reimburse the Government for part of the cost of maintenance.

Mr. MUDD. Well, but, Mr. Chairman, were not all these expenses paid by the Federal Government paid in pursuance of an act of Congress and by virtue of law? If that be the fact, would it be fair to go back and, in effect, repeal that law and saddle these expenses on the District?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is as fair as it is to ask for what is to be done here.

Mr. MUDD. After the Government has determined to pay the expense of obtaining the viaduct, and actually paid it in pursuance of law, then the gentleman comes in and says that after all this has been done we shall now put this past expenditure on the District.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I simply desire, by act of Congress, to ave the District reimburse the Federal Government for this expenditure. It is not taking from them, except by act of Congress, in accordance with the manner in which the control is to be given them.

Mr. MUDD. Is not the Government asking that the District government should now pay for something that in pursuance of legislation heretofore had the Government undertook and agreed to pay, and after authorizing it and the Government paid for it they now are asking the District to return the money? That would, in effect, be retroactive legislation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman from New York permit

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the District asked the Government to get an aqueduct for them, ought they not to be required to pay a part of the cost of creating that aqueduct?

Mr. MUDD. That might be so.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is the question we are confronted with. Mr. MUDD. That might be so, if that was provided in the bill at the time the aqueduct was provided for.

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly it is. It is for the expenses of the aqueduct and to require them to pay part of it. Here they are asking us to make a donation, and we put a condition on the donation—that they shall pay a proper part of it.

Mr. MUDD. But it is a condition applicable not to what they are going to do, but what has already been done.

Mr. SHERLEY. They have already got the aqueduct, but they are coming and asking for something, and we say we will give them that on their paying their fair part.

Mr. MADDEN. The District Commissioners are coming in and asking to secure not only the ownership and control of the aqueduct

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to pick up the fragments. The gentleman from New York had the floor. Does he yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. I was saying that the District Commissioners come in here and ask that they be given the control and management of the aqueduct, which was built by the Federal Government out of moneys from the Federal Treasury; and if we ask the District Commissioners in return to pay one-half of the cost of its construction we are not asking an unreasonable thing, it seems to me. The question is, Is what the District Commissioners want worth anything to the District? If it is, how much is it worth? If it is worth anything, they should pay whatever the sum is ascertained to be. How does the fact that it was paid for by the Government long years since enter into the consideration of this question? Is it to be understood that the District has but to ask that for which the Government paid and it will be given? Are the people of the District entitled to receive from the Federal Government that which cost $3,000,000, more or less, without being required to pay their proper share of the cost? That is the only question involved here; and it seems to me there ought not to be any trouble in reaching the right kind of a conclusion, and that conclusion should be that the District ought to pay its proper proportion of the cost of the construction and maintenance of the aqueduct.

Will the gentleman yield to me? Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman from New

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is proceeding under the fiveminute rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The bill has not been read for amend-

The CHAIRMAN. There is a pending amendment to the bill. Mr. FITZGERALD. But the bill has not been read by paragraphs for amendment. General debate is not closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had an amendment read, and the gentleman is estopped from saying that the bill is not now open for amendments.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had the amendment read in his own time.

The CHAIRMAN. And it has been offered. It has been formally offered from the Clerk's desk, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. MANN. The bill has not been read for amendments. I call the attention of the Chair to that.

The CHAIRMAN. It is very clear to the Chair. There is but one section to the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; there are two sections to the bill. The CHAIRMAN. The other does not amount to anything. The question is upon this amendment. That is open for discussion, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York now in behalf of his own amendment. He has made one speech. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask my colleague to wait and get his own time. I presume there is ample time for discussion. I shall call the attention of the committee to this fact, that although it has been asserted here several times that this bill has the approval of the War Department, that is not the fact. There is a statement in the report from the War Department that there is no objection known to its passage. But I take it that that is very different from a recommendation from the Department that the bill should pass. The fact is that the bill should not pass. The aqueduct at present is controlled and operated economically and satisfactorily, and it is better to leave it in that position. This amendment merely suggests that the people of the District of Columbia—those who own the prophere subject to taxation, if their representatives are to obtain from Congress the control of this aqueduct, paid for by the Federal Treasury—that they should, in consideration for that control, reimburse the Federal Treasury one-half of the expense, not of building the aqueduct, not of building the conduit, but merely of maintaining it prior to the time that the District contributed to the maintenance. It seems to me to be a very reasonable request, and I know of no reason why it should be objected to. Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. OLCOTT. I wanted to ask the gentleman if between 1850 and 1879 the taxes were not paid by the private owners of real estate in the District, and if it did not go into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Prior to 1879 they had a local government, and they have as a result of that government debts aggregating $23,000,000, upon which the interest is being paid. That government was abolished for several reasons, among others that if it had continued its bonded obligations would have overwhelmed even the Federal Treasury.

There seemed to be no limit to the extent of the obligations those conducting the government were ready to incur, and we still have a legacy in the shape of this bonded debt upon which interest is being paid. But I am not sufficiently familiar with the details of that government to know just what was done, except this, that none of the revenues raised by the former city government of Washington prior to 1879 was devoted to the maintenance or the construction of the aqueduct and the Conduit road, of which the Commissioners now desire to obtain complete control.

Mr. MADDEN. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making a statement. The War Department informed the Committee on Appropriations that it desired to retain control of the aqueduct because it wanted to have control of the water supply in case of war or any danger arising by which there might be a chance of the water supply being cut off from the Army that might be stationed here. And if there was no other reason why this bill ought not to pass, it seems to me that would be a sufficient reason.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BABCOCK. How much time is left on this amendment? The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will make an explanation, which he hopes will be satisfactory to the gentleman from Illi-The bill was read, general debate ensued, and then, without the formal waiving of the second reading of the bill for amendments, an amendment was offered and has been debated. The Chair rules that that brings the procedure now under the five-minute rule, having waived, as we do in hundreds of cases, the formal second reading of the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, has not the time practically been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], who has just yielded the floor, offered an amendment and made a speech in favor of it. It can be debated on the other side if any gentleman desires to. If not, the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the fact of this amendment having been offered and debated now dispense with the reading of the

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. McCall having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following

H. R. 25043. An act to authorize the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Chattahoochee River, in the State of Georgia.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 22580) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLAPP, Mr. McCumber, and Mr. Dubois as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3593) granting an honorable discharge to Joseph P. W. R. Ross. BALTIMORE AND WASHINGTON TRANSIT COMPANY OF MARYLAND.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I now call up the bill (H. R. 22123) to amend an act to authorize the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company of Maryland to enter the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1896.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Columbia, approved June 8, 1896.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company of Maryland, a corporation created by the laws of the State of Maryland, authorized by act of Congress to extend its line into the District of Columbia by an act approved June 8, 1896, be, and is hereby, authorized and required to further extend its line of street railway within the District of Columbia over, along, and upon the following-described route: Beginning where Third street NW. (as said street is designated on the map of the first section of the highway-extension plan of said District) intersects the present line of the railway of said transit company; thence south on said Third street to Madison street; thence west on said Madison street to Colorado avenue; thence southwesterly along said Colorado avenue to the intersection of Fourteenth street NW.; that the said company is further empowered to extend its line, under the provisions of this act, from its line on Aspen street through Willow street whenever the requirements of its patrons and the operation of the road may require: Provided, That said company shall acquire thereby no right to extend its said railway over, along, or upon any portion of the aforementioned route which is not now a dedicated street of the said District of Columbia until it shall have obtained the written consent of the owner or owners of the real property covered thereby or acquired said right of way by condemnation.

Sec. 2. That the said transit company shall be empowered to construct, maintain, equip, and operate a single or double track street railway over said line, with all necessary buildings, switches, machinery, appliances, appurtenances, and other devices necessary to operate the same by electricity, compressed air, storage battery, or other motive power, to be approved by the Commissioners of said District: Provided, That if electric power propulsion is used upon said extension or on any other portion of the line or lines o prescribed time. If this sum is not so deposited, this charter shall be void. If the sum is so deposited and the road is not in operation as herein prescribed, said $1,000 shall be forfeited to the District of Columbia and this charter shall be void.

SEC. 4. That failure or neglect to comply with any of the provisions of this act, except as hereinbefore provided for, shall render the said corporation liable to a fine of $25 for each and every day during which such failure or neglect shall continue, which penalty may be recovered in the name of the District of Columbia by the Commissioners of the said District in any court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, however, That unless the line of the said railway shall be completed, with cars running regularly thereon for the accommodation of passengers, within two years from the date of the passage of this act this charter shall be null and void.

SEC. 5. That the said company, in conjunction with the Capital Traction Company, may receive a rate of fare not exceeding 5 cents for each passenger for one continuous ride over the route aforesaid and the route of the said Capital Traction Company within the District of Columbia, or any part thereof, and shall sell tickets at the rate of six for 25 cents.

SEC. 6. That all the powers, rights, duties, and limitations imposed by the act of Congress authorizing said Baltimore and Washington Transit Company to enter the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1896, shall be applicable to the extension of the line of said company as proposed herein except as said act may be amended by the provisions hereof, it being the intent that said original act shall be applied to the system of the line of said company as proposed herein except as said act may be amended by the provisions hereof, it being the intent that said original act shall be applied to the system of the line of said extension had been included in the original act.

SEC. 7. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The Clerk read the following committee amendments:

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Chairman, this is fully explained in the report that accompanies the bill. The route as laid out is for the accommodation of the people in the neighborhood of Takoma Park, and will give additional accommodation to a section of the city that is not now covered by street railway companies. It has been fully considered by the committee, also by the District Commissioners, who have suggested amendments that have been made to the bill.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. There has been more or less agitation in the District in relation to free transfers; how far downtown does this road come?

Mr. GREENE. It connects with the Fourteenth street line at its terminus on Fourteenth street extended, at its extreme limit.

Mr. MANN. Is there an extra charge for coming into the

Mr. GREENE. No; only outside of the District. They make no extra charge in the District and give a free transfer to the Fourteenth street line.

Mr. MANN. Is there a new fare collected at once after they cross the District line?

Mr. GREENE. Not inside the District; when they get into Maryland they have a right to collect an additional fare.

Mr. MANN. They give a free transfer to the Fourteenth street line?

Mr. GREENE. Yes; and receive free transfers from the Fourteenth street line. It covers a section of the territory not now covered by any other road, and was petitioned for by the citizens' organizations in that neighborhood.

Mr. MANN. The right, I suppose, is reserved in this bill in some way so that if Congress should provide hereafter for universal transfers this company would be subject to that provision?

Mr. GREENE. Section 7 says that Congress reserves right to alter, amend, or repeal the act. All the rights of the public are preserved. The Commissioners had it carefully under their consideration and reported back several amendments to the original bill which was introduced and which the committee have adopted, and all the rights of the public are pre-

Mr. MANN. While it is true that that provision is in section 7 of the bill, as it is in other bills, it is not certain that under that provision of the law Congress can alter, amend, or repeal the act without liability.

Mr. GREENE. I do not think there will be any trouble in that regard. If Congress should authorize free transfers, I think this company would be subject to its provisions.

Mr. MANN. But it is quite a question, I want to say to the gentleman, as to whether Congress can amend a law, giving free transfers, without making it liable to the railroad company for taking private property.

Mr. GREENE. I do not know; and if the gentleman from Illinois does not know, I do not think anybody knows. [Laughter.

Mr. MANN. I do not think anybody will know until it is decided by the Supreme Court.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if the street railway company was an applicant for this grant?

Mr. GREENE. Yes. Mr. SHERLEY. Did the committee consider the advisability of having the company pay something for the franchise?
Mr. GREENE. No; it goes over an entirely new territory and connects with a trunk line. I know of no reason why the road going over a new territory should be compelled to pay for the franchise.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will find many reasons in ten years from now, when the franchise has become exceedingly valuable. I suggest that it might be proper for the committee to

Mr. GREENE. They pay the tax required from their re-

Mr. GREENE. They pay the the required from their receipts, and there is this provision in the bill for the altering or amending the law, and I think that would cover the grant.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman one further question. When may the House expect to have reported from the committee the bill dealing with the street-railway working of the District generally relative to the service they systems of the District generally relative to the service they shall give the residents of the District?

Mr. GREENE. Possibly it may be reported on the next District day. I know of no reason why it should not be reported two weeks from to-day.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman a ques-on. What percentage of the gross receipts is the railroad required to pay?

Mr. GREENE. Four per cent; the same as any other railroad.

Mr. PERKINS. What other obligation is imposed upon it? Mr. GREENE. To take care of the streets—to pave between the rails and put the streets in proper condition over which they lay the rails.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there any provision as to the character of cars which shall be used?

Mr. GREENE. All regulated by direction of the Commissioners of the District.

Mr. SHERLEY. The present cars on most of the lines are so antiquated that I was in hopes there would be some requirement that they should use modern ones.

Mr. GREENE. The probability is that they would not take antiquated cars, because the present roads need to use them all.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there any provision in the bill giving authority to the Commissioners of the District to compel the owners of the line to operate the cars within a specified period of time, and is there any provision in the bill to give the Commissioners the power to force the exercise of such authority is the contained in the bill? if it is contained in the bill?

Mr. GREENE. I don't think there is any difficulty at all about that, and that the Commissioners of the District have the right to control this road, and Congress has the right to exact whatever it pleases if it finds this road has not sufficient cars or facilities

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman tell me where the provision is requiring the railroad to pay 4 per cent?

Mr. GREENE. It is usual under the law. If the gentleman wishes to offer any amendment to that effect, I shall not object to it.

Mr. PERKINS. But there is no provision in this bill to that effect.

Mr. GREENE. I think not.
Mr. PERKINS. Why is the railroad obliged to pay 4 per cent if there is no provision of that kind in the bill?
Mr. GREENE. I think it is customary with all of the District railroads.

Mr. PERKINS. But it is not a question of custom; it is a question of law.

Mr. GREENE. If the gentleman has any suggestion to make, any amendment which would make it apply, I have no objection.

Mr. PERKINS. I am asking what the law is as proposed.

Mr. GREENE. I do not pretend to know the law. I am not

Mr. PERKINS. But the gentleman reports the bill. Mr. GREENE. I reported the bill; yes.

Mr. PERKINS. It will be the law, then, if it is passed, and I do not see any provision that compels that.

Mr. GREENE. I am informed that it is the law of the District of Columbia that every separate railroad in the District must pay 4 per cent of its gross receipts.

Mr. PERKINS. All street railroads coming into the District. Mr. GREENE. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. This is, I see, a corporation of the State of Maryland.

Mr. GREENE. Created by Congress also. Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. This grant is for the use of the territory within the District.

Mr. PERKINS. Would this corporation be subject to the provision of which the gentleman speaks?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Oh, yes. Clearly every one of these corporations run outside of the District, and they all pay their 4 per cent tax on fares collected in the District. That is the general law covering traction lines.

Mr. GREENE. If the gentleman will allow me, I will call his attention to section 6 of the bill, which provides as follows:

SEC. 6. That all the powers, rights, duties, and limitations imposed by the act of Congress authorizing said Baltimore and Washington Transit Company to enter the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1896, shall be applicable to the extension of the line of said company as proposed herein except as said act may be amended by the provisions hereof, it being the intent that said original act shall be applied to this extension in the same manner as if said extension had been included in the original act.

It was a regular charter granted by Congress. Congress has full control of it, and there is no way in which it can be taken out of their control.

Mr. PERKINS. In my ignorance I do not know what the provisions of that law are.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill by sections under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company of Maryland, a corporation created by the laws of the State of Maryland, and authorized by act of Congress to extend its line into the District of Columbia by an act approved June S, 1896, be, and is hereby, authorized and required to further extend its line of street railway within the District of Columbia over, along, and upon the following-described route: Beginning where Third street NW. (as said street is designated on the map of the first section of the highway-extension plan of said District) intersects the present line of the railway of said transit company; thence south on said Third street to Madison street; thence west on said Madison street to Colorado avenue; thence south-westerly along said Colorado avenue to the intersection of Fourteenth street NW.; that the said company is further empowered to extend its line, under the provisions of this act, from its line on Aspen street through Willow street whenever the requirements of its patrons and the operation of the road may require: Provided, That said company shall acquire thereby no right to extend its said railway over, along, or upon any portion of the aforementioned route which is not now a dedicated street of the said District of Columbia until it shall have obtained the written consent of the owner or owners of the real property covered thereby or acquired said right of way by condemnation.

With the following amendment:

With the following amendment:

Page 2, line 6, strike out all after the word "northwest" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That said company shall not construct its said railway over, along, or upon any portion of the aforementioned route which is not now a public highway of the District of Columbia until it shall have obtained, by dedication or condemnation, title to a right of way not less than 30 feet in width along such portion of said route as is not now a public highway; and before it shall have authority to lay tracks in said right of way it shall dedicate the same to the District of Columbia as a public highway."

The CHAIRMAN The question is on agreeing to the com-

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the said transit company shall be empowered to construct, maintain, equip, and operate a single or double track street railway over said line, with all necessary buildings, switches, machinery, appliances, appurtenances, and other devices necessary to operate the same by electricity, compressed air, storage battery, or other motive power, to be approved by the Commissioners of said District: Provided, That if electric power propulsion is used upon said extension or on any other portion of the line or lines of said company no portion of the electrical circuit shall be through the earth, but a return circuit of proper capacity and located similarly to the feed-wire circuit shall be provided for the electrical current, and that wherever the trolley system is used each car shall be provided with a double trolley, and that no earth connection shall be made with any dynamo furnishing power for the road. That section 4 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company of Maryland to enter the District of Columbia," approved June 8, 1896, be, and the same is hereby, repealed:

With the following amendment:

Insert at the end of the section the following:

"Provided, however, That said railway shall be constructed of good material, with rails of approved pattern, and in a neat and substantial manner, subject to the supervision and approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; the standard gauge to be used and the surfaces of the tracks to conform to the grades of the streets established by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and where the tracks lie within the streets of the District of Columbia the same to be paved between the rails and 2 feet outside thereof with such material and in such manner as shall be approved by the said Commissioners, and kept in repair by the said railway company."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 5. That the said company, in conjunction with the Capital Traction Company, may receive a rate of fare not exceeding 5 cents for each passenger for one continuous ride over the route aforesaid and the route of the said Capital Traction Company within the District of Columbia, or any part thereof, and shall sell tickets at the rate of six for 25 cents.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of section 5 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That from and after the passage of this act the rate of fare that may be charged for the transportation of passengers over any and all street railway lines in the District of Columbia shall not exceed 3 cents each, good for transportation of one passenger over the whole or any part of the line of such street railway company over which such tickets are sold."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. Mr. BABCOCK. This matter is foreign to the bill and applies to other lines and interests that are not being considered at this time in the House.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the point of or-der is well taken, because they undertake in this section to regulate the charge that shall be made by the Traction Company for the transportation of passengers within the District.

It is a well-known fact, however, that the street car companies in this city, which in reality cost at the beginning not more than $2,000,000, have at least $11,000,000 worth of water in them. The fact is they have about taken all of the water out of the Potomac River and added it to the stock of these traction companies here in the city of Washington and have declared a dividend upon a fictitious value of $13,000,000 of stock of 6 per cent, but in reality they never cost exceeding $2,000,000. They declared a dividend last year of $720,000. That was the dividend they declared, when in reality by juggling the figures, applying them in another place, the profit was much greater. The receipts from one traction company in the city of Washington were $1,639,786, being the gross receipts; operating expenses, 44 per cent, leaving 56 per cent, or $918,000 operating expenses, 44 per cent, leaving 50 per cent, or $915,000 profit for one traction company in the city of Washington. Now, nearly a million dollars, or almost one-half the cost—1 should say more than one-half the cost—of this traction company was made in one year's time. Now, you are endeavoring to regulate the railroads of the country. Commence by regulating petty larceny in the District of Columbia. Commence on behalf of the laboring people of the District of Columbia and say that while you are willing to regulate railroads throughout the country, that this class of robbery shall not be permitted within your sight here under the swish of the flag of the Republic itself. Now, I am informed that these roads originally cost per mile $60,000. To-day they are capitalized at $600,000, and on that $600,000 of capitalization they declare a dividend of 6 per cent. I do not believe that any sane man will dispute the proposition that they can carry passengers for 3 cents each in the District of Columbia and make money, and a very great deal of money at that. In the city of Cleveland, Ohio, they have a 3-cent rate. I believe there they have the best street car service in the world, but let Washington start the fight. Let this Congress start the fight in favor of a lower transportation rate. Start it right here in the District of Columbia. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I apprehend the Chair does not want to hear from anyone else as against the point of order, but still I would like to make one or two observations. It was decided years ago, by Speaker Henderson, that a bill to open one street in the District of Columbia could not be amended by making regulations touching the opening of other streets or streets generally. We have several times had it decided in this House that a special tariff bill, such as a bill to fix rates on imports from Porto Rico or the Philippines, can not be amended by going into the general question of tariff legislation, and while I am not sure whether or not this identical point has been passed upon here it seems to me, by analogy, you can not, under the title of a bill which is simply to authorize one railroad to enter the city of Washington, make regulations as to the charges for street-car fare for all the railroads of this city. The amendment is clearly not germane to the title of the bill, not germane to the subject-matter of the bill, nor is it in any sense germane to the section to which it is offered. I think it is very clear the point of order must be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a bill authorizing a street railway company or trolley line from outside Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to speak on the point of order?

No, sir; I thought the Chair had decided it. N. No; the Chair had not. This is a bill au-Mr. MADDEN. The CHAIRMAN. thorizing a street railroad company from outside the District of Columbia to come into the District of Columbia and connect in the city of Washington with what is called the "Traction Company." It provides for a point of contact, and then provides that a single fare shall carry a passenger from his occupancy of the car outside to the end of the traction line in the city of Washington. The point of order is made to the amendment that it is not germane to the bill under consideration. It has been distinctly ruled heretofore, it seems to the Chair, exactly on all fours with that question:

To a provision requiring two railroad companies in the District of Columbia to issue free transfers over the lines of one another an amendment requiring the two companies to issue universal transfers with all other intersecting lines in the District of Columbia was offered and held not to be germane.

Following that opinion and following the opinion which the Chair has, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "six," in line 8, section 5; so that it shall read, "and shall sell tickets at the rate of eight for 25 cents."

Mr. MADDEN. I would suggest that the gentleman strike out the word "five," in line 5, and insert the word "four;" so as to make the amendment complete.

Mr. JAMES. I will accept the amendment. In line 5, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "four;" and in line 8, strike out the word "six" and insert "eight;" so that the section will read:

A rate of fare not exceeding 4 cents for each passenger for one continuous ride over the route aforesaid and the route of the said Capital Traction Company within the District of Columbia, or any part thereof, and shall sell tickets at the rate of eight for 25 cents.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the amendment be put in writing under the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 5, strike out the word "five" and insert "four;" and in line 8 strike out the word "six" and insert "eight;" so that the section will read:

"That the said company, in conjunction with the Capital Traction Company, may receive a rate of fare not exceeding 4 cents for each passenger for one continuous ride over the route aforesaid and the route of the said Capital Traction Company within the District of Columbia or any part thereof, and shall sell tickets at the rate of eight for 25 cents."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word.
Mr. MANN. There may be a desire on the part of the committee to reduce the rate of fare in the District of Columbia, but there is a proper way to do that. I do not know anything about this company, know very little about the locality through which it is to run, but it is perfectly self-evident to everybody that this company can not afford to run in the country districts at a 4cent rate of fare, and if the purpose of Congress is to require those companies who carry many passengers in their cars to reduce the rate of fare, there is a proper way to do that. That can be done in proper form by a proper bill reducing the rate of fare or amending the charters of the companies in the District, and the vengeance of Congress against the existing companies ought not to be taken out against the new company, inaugurated probably at the request of the property owners for the development of a new territory. If we want to fight the existing companies, let us fight them, and not take out our fighting capacity upon an unborn child.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. JAMES. The question is this: If you require them to charge 4 cents a passenger and to sell eight tickets for 25 cents, will it not force the other traction companies in this city to meet that competition?

Mr. MANN. It will not force the other companies to do anything, because if you put that provision in the bill the bill will be as dead as a thing can be. That will end it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I would like to ask why?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows perfectly well that this or any other company can not afford to build a line out in the country for a 3-cent rate of fare, and if it could afford to and was controlled by one of the other companies, it would not do it. If you want to meet the fare question, meet it with the companies that are in existence.

Mr. TALBOTT. The fare of the company in the State of Maryland is regulated by the charter granted by the Maryland legislature. I do not know what it is in the franchise.

A MEMBER. Five cents.

Mr. TALBOTT. Five cents. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] that whenever this company agrees to take travelers at the rate of 4 cents for a single fare or to sell eight tickets for 25 cents all companies ought to be made to do it, and until then I do not think that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. James] ought to compel this company to attempt it.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to suggest that the amendment ruled out by the Chair sought to reach all of the companies and give to all the people, the toilers and the rest, a universal 3-cent rate, and there is a bill now pending before the Committee on the District of Columbia on the subject, but has never found the floor of this House. Of course gentlemen can always say this is not the proper way. The trouble is that the "proper way" will not get it, and when it will not get it it is proper to try another way, because what gentlemen here declare a "proper way" is always improper.

Mr. TALBOTT. Under the rules you can not do it, and it is not fair to this company, incorporated under the laws of Maryland and the rate of fare fixed in Maryland, that when they come into the District of Columbia they should be treated different from the other companies in the District. If they are all put on the same footing, I will vote for a bill, whenever it is reported, to make a uniform rate of eight tickets for a quarter. Still I am not willing to require that this com-pany have the fare fixed at 3 cents when all the other companies are given 5 cents for a single fare or can sell six tickets for a quarter.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment providing this street car company shall not charge more than cents for single fares and shall sell eight tickets for 25 cents. I have no doubt from what I have heard stated on the floor and from information which is within the knowledge of every other Member of this House that all the roads in this District could run at a 3-cent fare. Nobody doubts that. The gentleman from Maryland says because the road gets a 5-cent fare in Maryland it ought to be allowed to charge the same fare within the District.

Mr. TALBOTT. I did not say that they ought to collect a

5-cent fare, but that they ought to collect the same fare as the other companies do.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman says they should collect the same fare as the other companies do. I favor the same reduction as to the other roads. A few moments ago the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. James] offered an amendment to this bill making the same reduction on all the roads. The chairman declared the amendment out of order and would not allow a vote on it.

The gentleman from Maryland says we should wait till a general bill on the subject is reported and comes up for consideration, when we could properly offer these amendments. The gentleman from Maryland has lived in vain if, after his service in this House, he believes that it is possible to report a bill out and get consideration of it here that would look to a general reduction of the street car fares. I believe that twothirds of the membership of this House are in favor of a 3-cent fare on all the roads in the District, and I believe that they will vote for it if an opportunity is given them. I also believe three-fourths of the membership of this House are in favor of pass-ing what is known as the "La Follette bill," but they have not voted on it, and to the day of judgment they never wil! vote upon it, if the present organization shall continue. I believe that will be true of every other demand for reform until a change is made. Gentlemen say: "Oh, let us not load this bill down with amendments. Let us wait till another time and for a more appropriate bill." Gentlemen are not willing to take the responsibility of voting against reduction of car fares and attempt to avoid the consequences by asking us to wait for a more appropriate bill and a more convenient season. They seek to excuse themselves to their constituents by saying they favor a reduction of fares, but "Let us do it in some other way. Let it be done on a general bill." But so long as the House is organized as at present no general bill will be voted upon. [Applause.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman is a member of the District Committee, and is aware that what is known as the terminal bill is before that committee. The terminal bill will be reported to this House, and an amendment of this character will be germane to that bill.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, true I am a member of that committee; and I have small hopes that such a provision as this will be reported, or, if it were brought into the House, that it would be allowed to be voted upon. I speak not of this bill alone, but of the multitudes of bills buried in that committee and other committees, and buried so deeply that they never can be dug out. Gentlemen will go back and say to their constituents: "I favored these bills, but never was allowed to vote upon them." And the organization of this House says to vote upon them." And the organization of this House says to its followers: "Go on home and tell your people that you were in favor of these measures, and we will see to it that you are never put on record by a vote."

Mr. Chairman, we are face to face with our duty. We know car fares in the District are too high. We have an opportunity to reduce them by voting for this amendment. If we adopt this amendment we shall have won a victory for the people for good government. If we vote the amendment down, it will be a victory for the corporations. Let us vote for the people and make a record upon which we can face those whom we repre-

Some propose to vote this amendment down, they say, because nev prefer to have it offered to another bill. Where is the they prefer to have it offered to another bill. other bill? If it were introduced it would probably be smothered in committee. If not, then the organization of the House, through the Committee on Rules or by some other operation, would deprive us of a vote.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are up against a real, living propo-Are we in favor of the people, or do we stand for the great corporations and railroad companies of the country? Let every man answer that question by his vote. Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There was a proposition up here a few days ago which was not smuggled into the committee. It was up here for every man to vote upon it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I yielded for a question, not a speech. Mr. BARTHOLDT. I should like to ask my friend how he voted on the proposition of the deep waterway from the Lakes

[Laughter.]

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from The Hague, my colleague [Mr. BARTHOLDT], that lover of peace, that enemy of all military preparedness, wants to know how I voted on the deep waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf. I want to say to him that I will answer his question when he answers me one first, and that is to tell me how many times the Committee on Improvement and Levees of the Mississippi River held meetings during the Fifty-eighth Congress. The gentleman from St. Louis, who parades here as the great and only friend of the deep waterway, the great apostle of the Mississippi, if you listen to his own words, was chairman of the Committee on Improvements and Levees of the Mississippi River during two sessions of Congress-throughout the entire Fifty-eighth Congress. Bills were introduced by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon] and by others and referred to that committee. Not once did he call his committee together to consider those bills. I ask him to answer me why he did not call his committee together to consider these bills. Then on some occasion when I have plenty of time I will answer his question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman— Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Wait a minute. There is another Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Wait a minute. There is another way in which to defeat this bill, and that is to bring up some sort of a ghost, the departed ghost of the great boom that was gotten up for the deep waterways by my colleague from St. Louis and the Business Men's League that was behind him. Is the gentleman going to erect that now as a barrier behind which the corporations of the city of Washington will intrench themselves and continue to rob the people? [Applause and laughter.] I say to the gentleman from St. Louis that it is up to him to determine what he will do, not what I did do. It is the auty of my colleague to vote in the interest of the people. He can vote here now in favor of a lower rate of street car fare. He can still leave a sufficient margin of profit to the street car company and at the same time relieve the poor people of this District from the extortionate rate that is now charged them. Ave. that is not all. By commencing here at the capital of the Republic we can set an example that will be taken up and emulated throughout the land by every city whose people are oppressed Here we are, the assembled representaby these corporations. tives of the Whole Republic. We see the people being op-pressed by corporate tyranny. We have an opportunity to get relief for the people. Why shall we not set the example that others may follow, and bring these corporations within the realm of reasonableness and fairness? I believe that is all I care to say, Mr. Chairman. The best way to discuss this question is to vote. Choose ye this day whom ye will serve, the corporations or the people.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin.
Mr. BARTHOLDT. I merely want to call attention to the fact that although my colleague has had his time extended five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair notifies the gentleman from Missouri that the gentleman from Wisconsin has been recognized.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I will say that I was one of seventeen who voted for the gentleman's [Mr. BARTHOLDT's] amendment for the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman has not answered the question whether he voted for the deep waterway. That is hat I want to know

I did.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman did? Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes; I voted for a survey to see what it would cost and what kind of a plan should be inaugurated.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Did you vote for the amendment that we offered?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I was one of the seventeen who under the gentleman's lead voted in favor of the reach from Cairo to St. Louis. I realized before the ignominious defeat to which the gentleman would lead us, but notwithstanding, as a true soldier I followed his leadership. I was one of the immortal seventeen that rallied around his flag in favor of an increased appropriation from St. Louis to Cairo.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman— Mr. BABCOCK. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. In the first place would it be in order to say a few words about the bill pending before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair that is in

[Laughter.]
BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in the first Mr. BABCOCK. place, that if this proposed amendment is adopted there will, in my opinion, be no road built.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman speak by authority? Mr. BABCOCK. It has been a question with all of our suburban lines whether they could maintain themselves at the present rates of fare. Another thing the committee wants to understand is that practically every fare that is collected is divided between the connecting roads. If they collect 4 cents after crossing the District line and give a transfer, the other line gets one-half of that, which leaves them 2 cents for the fare.

Mr. JAMES. I understood the gentleman a moment ago to say that his committee perhaps would report a bill making a 3-cent rate.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will get to that if the gentleman will contain himself.

Mr. JAMES. Is it not true that the gentleman has been chairman of the committee four years at least, to my knowledge, and that he has never brought in any such bill, notwithstanding the enormous charges and profits made by the street cars in this District?

Mr. BABCOCK. What bill?

Mr. JAMES. Establishing a 3-cent rate of fare.

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir; and I hope the committee never will. Mr. JAMES. Did not the gentleman state that his committee would bring in such a bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. I made no such statement. What did the gentleman say? Mr. JAMES.

Mr. BABCOCK. If the gentleman will permit, I will tell the committee. Every member of the District Committee is aware that before this Congress adjourns a bill will have to be reported to this House, and must necessarily be reported, taking all of to this House, and must necessarily be reported, taking all of the street-car lines to the Union Depot. Any amendment for a 2-cent fare, or a 3-cent fare, or for universal transfers, or anything relating to those lines, will be in order on that bill.

Mr. JAMES. Will that bill be reported on the 4th of March, about 11 o'clock? [Laughter.]

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir; it will not. I want to say, further,

Mr. Chairman, that that bill, in my opinion, would have been before the House to-day had it not been for the insistent demands of the Citizens' Association of the District of Columbia for further hearings. I declared the hearings closed on the last committee day, and three or four presidents of these associations insisted that they have further time to be heard on these various questions of free transfers, rate of fares, as well as of street-railway regulation. Now, Mr. Chairman, the committee has a further hearing next Wednesday on this matter. Every Member of the House understands the absolute necessity of reporting that bill and passing it before this Congress adjourns or else we shall have the Union Station with no communication by street-car lines. On that bill, when it is reported, Mr. Chairman, amendments will be germane, because it refers to all of the city lines. I concur with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], which is very unusual [laughter], and I want to indorse what he said and compliment him on his remarks. But if you adopt this amendment you simply kill this proposition. But

Mr. JAMES. I would like to ask the gentleman a further question.

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman had an opportunity a moment ago, if he wanted to give the House an opportunity to vote for a 3-cent rate applicable to all the lines in the District of Columbia, and didn't that amendment go out on a point of order made by the gentleman himself?

Mr. BABCOCK. I made the point of order, for I am against the proposition, because I do not think the street-car lines that are operated in the District of Columbia could be operated on that basis.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman will admit further that hearings were had before his committee which showed that one streetcar line declared a dividend of $900,000 on stock at $13,000,000, reckoning the cost of the route to be $600,000 a mile when it only cost $60,000 a mile to build it?

Mr. BABCOCK. Sixty thousand dollars to build a road?

Mr. JAMES. Does the gentleman deny that it cost only $60,000 a mile to build and equip the road and that they reckon it now at $600,000 a mile?

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not know of any road having the underground construction in the District that did not cost more than $60,000 per mile. Does the gentleman refer to District roads, or roads in other cities?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Sixty thousand dollars per mile.

Mr. JAMES. Sixty thousand dollars per mile, and was not that hearing before the gentleman's committee on the 31st of January, 1907?

Mr. BABCOCK. The testimony was given before the committee that it cost $60,000 a mile of single track or practically that to build an underground road now, outside of the equipment.

Mr. JAMES. Are they not capitalized in this city at $600,000 a mile, and is not a dividend declared of 6 per cent upon the capitalization of $600,000 per mile, where it did not cost much more than $60,000 per mile to build and equip the railroads?

Mr. BABCOCK. At the same hearings I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it was shown that the recent construction in the District of Columbia, the extension of the Fourteenth street line, did cost $600,000 for the construction and the buildings connected with it. Now, the gentleman can not pick out a single mile. He might just as well take a mile of railroad on the prairies, where there is no grading, and that cost $10,000, and say that he can build the New York Central for $10,000 per mile. One proposition is as good as the other.

Mr. JAMES. If the gentleman will permit this question: Twenty-two miles of double track in this city never cost this construction company more than $3,000,000, and to-day it is capitalized at $13,000,000. Is not that true?

Mr. BABCOCK. I can not answer whether that is true or not. Mr. JAMES. And is it not true, I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin, that there is $10,000,000 worth of water to-day in the stock of the traction companies of the District of Columbia?

Mr. BABCOCK. I don't think that is true.

Mr. JAMES. Is it not a further fact that they are declaring a dividend of 6 per cent upon that false capitalization?

Mr. BABCOCK. They are declaring upon their $12,000,000 of capital stock. They are declaring a dividend of 6 per cent

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a ques-

The gentleman's time has expired. The CHAIRMAN. gentleman from Illinois can take five minutes in his own

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want to take the floor in my own right. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask that my time be extended sufficiently

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not this company which is seeking a franchise to build a street-car line in the District of Columbia is not the company which is building the interurban line between Baltimore and Washington?

Mr. BABCOCK. I will have to leave that to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Greene].

Mr. GREENE. It is not the same company that is building an interurban line or that has a charter to build a line between Baltimore and Washington.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask whether or not it is not the purpose of this company to run an interurban car service, instead of an urban service?

Mr. GREENE. It is going to run a line to accommodate the people from where the line starts north on the Fourteenth-street line, in this city.

Mr. MADDEN. Where does the line start?.

Mr. GREENE. At Takoma Park, on the line as shown on the map here—at Takoma Park, and runs down to connect with the Fourteenth-street line over the new territory not yet occupied.

Mr. MADDEN. Is all of that territory within the District of Columbia?

Mr. GREENE. Not quite; but nearly all of it is within the District of Columbia.

Mr. MADDEN. How much of it is outside of the District? Mr. GREENE. There is no appreciable portion, probably not more than a quarter of a mile, outside of the District.

Mr. MADDEN. Then there is only a quarter of a mile of this proposed line outside of the District of Columbia, and it is admitted by the gentleman in charge of the bill that 5 cents additional fare is to be allowed to be collected when the District line is reached.

Mr. GREENE. It has 2 miles outside of the quarter mile included in this grant in its present line; it has 2 miles of track outside of that.

Mr. MADDEN. It is proposed, then, to give the right to charge 5 cents for carrying passengers 24 miles?

Mr. GREENE. No; it is not proposed to charge a single cent inside of the District. It gets transfers over the line that it connects with-free transfers-and it does not charge a single fare until it gets outside of the District.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I say. When it reaches the District line it charges an extra fare.

Mr. GREENE. Which the people who live on the line are very glad to pay.
Mr. MADDEN.

And up to the point where it reaches the District line it charges a fare.

Mr. GREENE. Yes, sir; and gives a transfer.
Mr. MADDEN. So there are two fares to carry you not to exceed perhaps 6 miles.

Mr. GREENE. I will state to the gentleman that inside the District there is no other fare charged; when it gets outside the District it charges a fare, as it has the right to do.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me ask the gentleman this question, then:

If the car starts at the point in Maryland where the road begins it charges a fare to the District line, does it not?

Mr. GREENE. No, sir. Mr. MADDEN. There is no fare collected when you get on the car at the point where the railroad begins?

Mr. GREENE. The railroad has 2 miles on which anybody who lives on the line or uses that end of the line pays a fare.

Mr. MADDEN. When they get on the car.

Mr. GREENE. And get a free transfer, as do all suburban lines. Mr. MADDEN.

I understand the gentleman to say when

Mr. GREENE. No additional fare; they get a free transfer on to the city line. They carry them over into the District without charge and give a free transfer from the Fourteenth street line.

Mr. MADDEN. And what is the grant in this bill of a right to the company to charge 25 cents for six tickets?

Mr. GREENE. It gives them the right to sell six tickets for 25 cents just the same as lines do in the city and give a free transfer over the line, with its connections.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the chairman of the District Committee to say in the beginning of this discussion that an additional fare was charged for a ride beyond the District line, and now I would like to find somebody who knows whether that is true or not.

Mr. GREENE. I stated clearly that the passenger coming over the Fourteenth street line, when he leaves at the point of connection with this line, gets a transfer within the District without payment. If he rides in the State of Maryland, he gets six tickets for 25 cents, which are accepted-

Mr. MADDEN. Then you pay an extra fare.
Mr. GREENE. Certainly, when you get outside of the Dis-

Mr. MADDEN. That is just exactly what I have been endeavoring to ascertain.

Mr. GREENE. I thought I stated it plainly.
Mr. MADDEN. If you pay an extra fare to go out, you also pay an extra fare to come in.

Mr. GREENE. You pay one fare and get a free transfer. They do not charge anything in the District.

Mr. MADDEN. Do you mean to say passengers are carried free after getting to the District line?

Mr. GREENE. In the District.
Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman mean to say that it costs more to go to Takoma Park than to come back from Takoma Park?

Mr. GREENE. There is no difference. When he comes in he pays 5 cents and gets a transfer inside the District.

Mr. TALBOTT. Suppose he is going out into Maryland. Does he get a transfer?

Mr. GREENE. He gets a transfer out into Maryland. Mr. MADDEN. Then he only pays one fare.

Mr. GREENE. In the District.

Mr. MADDEN. In and out? Mr. GREENE. Yes; one fare.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not understand this bill provides any such condition of things.

Mr. GREENE. I do not understand the District has any control over fares in the State of Maryland.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand that when a man gets on a car in the District he pays a fare to the District line and when he gets to the District line he is compelled to pay another fare if he goes outside.

Mr. GREENE. If he rides, he pays.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, if he walked, he would not have to pay. [Laughter.]
Mr. GREENE. Men can not run a road on air and not collect anything for people riding over it.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, we are legislating here to give authority to some corporation to charge $9\frac{1}{6}$ cents for carrying passengers not to exceed 6 miles, and that is an unfair proposition. Now, gentlemen in charge of the bill have said that if we refuse to give the privileges sought to be secured to this corporation in the way in which they want those privileges they will refuse to build the line.

Mr. GREENE. I have not said so. Mr. MADDEN. I did not claim that the gentleman had said

Mr. GREENE. I have not said so.
Mr. MADDEN. I said that the gentleman in charge of the bill, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, said so.

Mr. BABCOCK. They could not get the money anywhere. Mr. MADDEN. I say this, that this is one of the stale, wornout arguments always used on every such occasion as this, that whenever any company seeks a franchise and the Members of Congress seek to regulate the conditions under which the franchise shall be granted, they are told that if they do not act with the greatest degree of liberality the companies seeking to ac-commodate the people by conducting a street car railway for their benefit will refuse to grant the privileges to the people which the people are demanding of them. We are told that the people in the neighborhoods through which this street car line is proposed to run are clamoring for street car service. told that unless it is granted on the terms demanded by the corporation they will get no service. We are told that we have no right to demand consideration on behalf of the people. told that it is unfair to demand a reduction of the street car We are told that all of the other street railway companies are allowed to charge certain fares. We are told that it would be unfair to exact from this infant monopoly some concessions which are not granted by other corporations of a similar char-We are told that this railroad is to be constructed through a sparsely settled territory. We are told that the expense of its construction will be so enormous that these men can not borrow money on their bonds to build it unless they are allowed to charge an exorbitant fare. We are told that this demand of ours for fair treatment of the people of the District is unjust and discriminatory. ,
Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, having given some attention to the capitalization and outstanding existing bonded indebtedness of the street railroads here, I think I can make a somewhat correct statement so far as it has been gone into. The outstanding stock of ment so far as it has been gone into. The outstanding stock of the Capital Traction Railroad is $12,000,000. Its bonded indebtedness is $1,080,000. When the capital stock of the Capital Traction road was first issued, it was for $12,000,000. never been increased or reduced since. According to the testimony before our committee, given at a public hearing, the president of that company stated that after this stock was issued it went down in the market to 45 cents on the dollar. Twelve million dollars of stock multiplied by 45 cents will give something over $5,000,000 as the total value of the Capital Traction Company, measured by the market value of the stock. That value included all of the tangible property and all the value attaching to the franchise. The stock of that company is still $12,000,000, and the stock sells on the market to-day at $1.41, $1.42, and as high as $1.45. In other words, the profits due to increased value of stock is about $12,000,000. Since that time they sold the power-house site for $550,000, and declared an extra dividend of $480,000 out of that amount and put it in their pockets, which reduced the original value of $5,000,000 by $480,000. They pay a 6 per cent dividend, or $720,000, on the $12,000,000, and 4 or 5 per cent on $1,000,000. The enhanced value of the stock, the excessive dividends, and the construction of about 3 or 4 miles of double track that has since been met out of earnings, makes this entire property a clear profit to its present owners. And yet that company persistently refuses to agree to free universal transfers. I notified them that I would offer an amendment to that effect on the bill referred to by the chairman, and they stoutly resisted it; and yet when I asked them if this amendment was adopted and passed would they take 1 cent less for their stock than its present market value, the answer was, "No; it is not for sale."

Take up the other company here. It has a capital stock of $15,000,000, and a bonded indebtedness of $12,913,000, and pays a dividend of 5 per cent on the preferred stock of eight and onehalf millions and 4 or 5 or 6 per cent on the bonds.

20.28 miles of track in the District.

In all, the Washington Railway and Electric Company, measured by the stock and bond issue, is bonded and stocked at over $1,200,000 to the mile. Yet they say they will be wrecked and ruined to even agree to a universal free transfer. am only seeking to give a free transfer; and afterwards we can consider, after a proper investigation, an amendment to reduce the fares and give universal transfers. I am only proposing free transfers, and in doing that it is said we are making an attack upon the bonded and stock value of this property. Now, these are the facts reported by the companies themselves: The stock of the Capital Traction Company is $606,666 per mile par. bonded indebtedness of the company is $1,000,000, and that makes, with the capital stock and bonded indebtedness, something over $700,000 per mile. The president of that company stated that he only claimed it cost $60,000 per mile single track underground; some of it constructed within a year cost more. But you must remember that there are 5 miles of this Capital Traction road that is overhead trolley that does not cost more than half what the other does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. I should like to have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMS. The taxes paid by the Capital Traction Company on $18,000,000 of actual market value is $76,000, in a city where we have the lowest tax value of any city where property is taxed at all. Yet we stand here helpless for some reason or -I do not know what it is-and seem to regard as sacred and holy the rights of corporations whose very life depends upon a repealable franchise. No franchise has been given that has not a repeal or amendment clause in it. They even claim there is no franchise value; yet when you calculate by the most liberal method possible it would not cost $6,000,000 to produce every mile, all the equipment, and all the real estate in the most modern style at the present price of material and labor, the highest known in the history of this country. I would like the House to take some note of these things, and when the time comes they may know something about what they are acting on.

We are asked for an increase in the salaries of the clerks in the District of Columbia, and we are not willing that when they come to their work they shall have a free transfer, while the value of these companies is two-thirds franchise, and the franchise will grow more valuable every day without added operating expense to the railroads themselves of a substantial character. I do not think that this ought to be gotten at by piecemeal, by undertaking to force a 3-cent rate on a road not yet built, and when they come to this city have to fight these well-equipped railroads now in existence. I think it is a mistaken policy to put these new roads at a disadvantage with this formidable opposition that they have got to meet from these well-equipped railroads when they seek to secure permission to cross the streets of Washington. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether this proposition is in order or not, and it does not make any difference whether it is or it is not. This debate has done a great deal of good, whether the point of order is sustained or overruled.

There is just one way in which the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin, can settle this whole thing, and that is to agree to get his committee together to-morrow morning and report a general 3-cent-fare bill, and then get the Committee on Rules together and induce them to give us the right of way for that bill, because that is where we are coming to.

A Member. It would be a pretty hard job to do that.

Mr. JAMES. But the point of order was made by the chairman against just such a proposition half an hour ago.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not think it would be quite as hard a job as you think.

I have always protested against Congress sitting as the city council of the city of Washington, and I protest yet; but this District is used as a legislative experiment station for the rest of the country, and instead of this city's being behind all other cities in all municipal improvements, it ought to be ahead of all the other great cities in that line. If you are going to continue it as a legislative experiment station, you ought to pass some legislation here that has some good and some sense in it. It has been demonstrated—it is no longer a question to be debated—that a 3-cent fare in a great city is a good thing for the people and a good thing for the street railroads, too, because it increases greatly the number of persons who do the riding. If Tom Johnson never does another good thing while he lives in this world, he deserves a monument as high as Washington's for having forced that gang in the city of Cleveland to accept his theories on this kind of legislation at least. [Applause.]

There is another thing about it, Mr. Chairman, that might as well be said here as anywhere else, and that is that no street railroad charter in this city or any other great city of the land ought to have ever been given to any corporation under the shining sun. Every one of them ought to have been put up at auction and sold to the highest bidder. Then Congress ought to legislate fairly on the whole subject.

This proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], that there shall be a universal-transfer law passed for the benefit of the people of the District of Columbia, ought to be agreed to by every man in this House. It is a gross outrage the way they run it. That is the plain English of the whole situation. For instance, you ride two or three blocks on the F street line and you run somewhere into this other line on Pennsylvania avenue-I don't know the name of one of them from the other. You can not get a transfer. Will any man say that it is worth 5 cents to ride two or three blocks on one of these cars? Another thing about it. You, Mr. Chairman, and myself and the most of us here, if we are in a hurry, can afford to pay two or three fares to get eight or ten blocks in this town and not miss it; but you take the average citizen of Washington, take these clerks that they are always talking about raising the salaries of, and whether they have to walk half a mile or dig down into their pockets for another nickel to contribute to these street railroad companies is a very serious proposition for them. They have to count the nickels in order to keep their heads above water, financially speaking. You can bowl this proposition out here now on a point of order, but you can not keep this proposition out of this House in a way that we will get a fair crack at it, and I serve notice on you to that effect right now.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I want to say

I want to say to the committee and to the gentleman from Missouri, as I said before, that there is a bill pending before the District Committee that necessarily must be reported at this session, to which all of these amendments will be germane, and on which the sense of the House can be taken, but not on a little suburban line like

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask you a question.

Mr. BABCOCK. No, no; I am talking.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Go on.

We can not get one of the companies in the Mr. BABCOCK. District of Columbia to construct these suburban lines, because it is not profitable construction.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I ask a question right there?
Mr. BABCOCK. No; I refuse to yield until I have finished.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.
Mr. BABCOCK. Just a moment. As to the construction of ject to a point of order.

this very line, except for this Maryland connection, I would oppose it and insist that one of the lines in Washington build it. They will not do it unless they are forced to do it, and these Maryland people will. There is the situation. But I will say further to the gentleman, if you tack these amendments onto this new construction you stop it. No one will furnish money or take the bonds of these lines to build roads on a 3-cent fare on a suburban line. Now, I am only one of eighteen members of the Committee on the District of Columbia, but each member of that committee will bear me out in the statement when I say that there will be before the House an important bill to which all of these amendments will be germane and proper.

Mr. CLAYTON. When?

Mr. BABCOCK. Just as soon as the committee can get it

Mr. CLAYTON. Oh!

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to say further that the bill would be before the House to-day had it not been for the insistence of the different citizens' associations in Washington for further hearings, and I refer to the leader of the minority on that committee to confirm my statement.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a statement in that connection, The chairman was indifferent, I might say almost opposed, to further hearings, for the reason that it would take up so much time he was afraid that the bill would not get before the House in time to be passed before adjournment. We heard the officers of the gas company and the Capital Traction Company, but not a word from the Washington Traction Company. Upon my own request Wednesday was set aside for hearings, one-half to go to one side and one-half to the other. The chairman is not to blame for this bill not being reported favorably or unfavorably up to this time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question in order to get informa-When is the committee going to report this general bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. I am only one member out of eighteen, and I should have to have an opportunity to consult the other seventeen in order to answer the question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin believe that the bill will be reported?

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that I have every reason to believe that that bill will be on the Calendar the next District day.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Another question. Suppose that it turns out that these present principal railroad corporations of this town refuse to build this road with a 3-cent-fare feature attached to it, does not the gentleman believe that there are men in this District of Columbia who have money that would jump at the chance?

Mr. BABCOCK. They would jump away from it just as fast as they could jump, and probably it would take two jumps to

[Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do you not think it would be better to wait until some fellow would build it?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri, my colleague, a question. Taking it to be true that the corporations that are operating the railroads in this District would refuse to carry out the provision of this bill, is not the revenue of this District and of this Government ample so that we ourselves could build and operate that sort of a line?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think there is a plenty of revenue. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Ought we not to do it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am opposed to giving franchises to these franchise grabbers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be reported again.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. James), there were—90 ayes and 50 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 5 by adding at the end thereof the following:

"And grant transfers over all connecting lines, entitling the holder thereof to a continuous ride in either direction without the payment of an additional fare over the line or lines over which the transfer is given."

Mr. BABCOCK. I make the point of order on that, Mr.

Mr. MADDEN. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it is not sub-

Mr. BABCOCK. I raise the point of order that it is not germane and that it is unconstitutional; that Congress can not compel other lines of street cars to carry passengers without consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will point out the difference between this amendment and the one offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. In that case it was an attempt to compel other companies of the District to carry passengers at reduced rates of fare. In the present instance the proposition is to compel the new company, if chartered, to extend the travel of their passengers over all the lines of the District of Columbia without the payment of any additional fare. It puts no duty upon the other companies to carry them nor does it appear to the Chair how one railroad company can force another one to carry its passengers free of charge.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, then I would like to suggest an amendment to the amendment,

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman can withdraw his amendment and modify it. The Chair hears no objec-

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I now offer my amendment as perfected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 5 by adding at the end thereof the following:
"And grant transfers over all connecting lines entitling the holders thereof to a continuous ride in either direction without the payment of an additional fare over the line or lines over which the transfer is given; and it shall be incumbent on the connecting lines to accept said transfers." said transfers

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The same question has been passed upon by the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 6. That all the powers, rights, duties, and limitations imposed by the act of Congress authorizing said Baltimore and Washington Transit Company to enter the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1896, shall be applicable to the extension of the line of said company as proposed herein except as said act may be amended by the provisions hereof, it being the intent that said original act shall be applied to this extension in the same manner as if said extension had been included in the original act. in the original act.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, creating a new section, numbered 7, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further amendment to be offered to section 6, the gentleman's proposition will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert a new section as section 7, as follows:
"The privileges herein granted are granted on the express condition that cars shall be run under such rules as may from time to time be made by the District Commissioners, and any violation of which shall be a misdemeanor, and for any such violation said corporation shall be liable to a fine of not less than $50 and not to exceed $200.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the companies existing at present within the District of Columbia, or some of them at least, run street cars without any regulations whatever by the Commissioners. They run them either in bunches or they do not run them at all.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is no objection to the amendment.
Mr. MADDEN. Very well; I have nothing further to say.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the section in order that I may ask the chairman of the committee a question, and that question is this: I would like the chairman of the committee to tell the House if he can who the men are who are seeking this franchise, and whether anybody connected with the organization of the railroads proposed to be constructed under this bill is identified in any way with any of the street car companies at present operated and owned within the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I am personally unable to answer the question. I yield to the gentleman from Massachu-

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Chairman, I will state that there is no one connected with the present lines who is connected with this company

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman tell the House who the gentlemen are who are interested in it and whether they are qualified to build the road?

Mr. GREENE. The line is very largely owned in Baltimore by some gentlemen there of the name of Williams, the largest owners of it, a prominent law firm in the city of Baltimore

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there ought to be some evidence of the ability of the men in whose favor this law is to be enacted to carry out the plan proposed in the bill—not only their ability to do that, but their willingness to do it. We ought to know who they are, where they are, how much money they have, what their ability is to get money if they have not enough, and all about it. It seems to me that this is a matter in which the people of the District are interested. It seems to me that there ought not to be any valuable franchise of this sort granted until the House is informed as to the ability of the men in whose favor the law is being enacted, and as to their identity as well.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Has the gentleman examined sections 3 and 4 of the bill, containing conditions providing for good faith from the company?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, it requires a deposit of a thousand dol-

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; section 3 requires a deposit of a thousand dollars and section 4 requires some action to be taken within a certain time, and carries with it a penalty and provides that unless the road has been constructed and is in operation within two years the charter shall be absolutely void.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, will anybody contend that a thousand dollars is any kind of security for the construction of a railroad? Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is the forfeiture of the charter within two years.

Mr. MADDEN. I presume they could enjoin themselves from going on with the improvement if they wanted to, and the Government would then be stopped from interfering and annulling the charter.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If there is any money in the enterprise I suppose there would be no question about its being constructed.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think it an unreasonable proposition to ask the names of the men and the ability of the men to do the thing which they are seeking to do?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, I am not criticising the gentleman for the questions he is asking, but simply call his attention to the safeguards that the bill already contains, which, it seems to me, are reasonably sufficient to secure action, and if no action is taken within two years there is no charter; and I think that that is a reasonable safeguard and about all that is usually connected with similar companies.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, what is usual-Mr. CRUMPACKER. This road, I This road, I understand, is intended for the accommodation and convenience of the community at Takoma Park, and it does not look as if it would be a very profitable enterprise.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not see why it would not. They are starting 2½ miles outside of the District line, and they are allowed to charge a 5-cent fare to the District line. They are allowed to charge 4 cents for a single fare from the District line to the Fourteenth street line. It is only about 3% miles at the utmost. Assuming they divided that fare within the District with the other company, the connecting company, then they have cents and something more for carrying a passenger 6 miles.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They will get 2 cents-

Mr. MADDEN. So I do not see that they are to be pitied— Mr. CRUMPACKER. The other company will get 2½ cents and these people all there is left of the fare that the bill provides.

Mr. MADDEN. We would like to get the information as to who these people are.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill. The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WASHINGTON, SPA SPRING AND GRETTA RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask present consideration of the bill (S. 3668) to authorize the Washington, Spa Spring and Gretta Railroad Company, of Prince George County, to extend its street railway into the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 24. That this act shall take effect from and after the date of

During the reading of the above,

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Is the bill subject to amendment now?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, this bill is somewhat similar to the one the House has considered, except it is not connected, as I understand, with any Baltimore enterprise. It is a suburban road coming into the District of Columbia and joins the Washington Traction at Eighth street. People living along this line are much interested in having this road constructed. It would have been constructed long ago, except that the Bladensburg road was too narrow, being only 66 feet, but we have passed a law this Congress authorizing the widening of Bladensburg road to 90 feet, which makes it abundantly wide for a double trolley line without injury to the road. Now, this bill has passed the Senate. It has been thoroughly considered by the Commissioners, and I have been unable to hear a word in any direction in opposition. The people along the line are interested as much as they possibly could be.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Just a moment; and I want to state to every Member of the House that I hope this bill will not be amended from the fact if it is amended and goes back to the other body, with the crowded condition of public business at this time, in all probability it will not be considered and will not be passed. If it is passed now, the road can be constructed during the vacation, and as to the rate of fare and things of that sort, Congress will have abundant time to regulate anything of that sort before anybody will travel over this line, and the right to alter, amend, and repeal is reserved in this as in other acts. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Mupp], whose district this road runs into, and who introduced the bill in the House similar to the one that passed in the Senate, but if the gentleman from Illinois wishes to ask me personally any question, I will yield to him.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MADDEN. I notice that this provides that freight can be carried on the streets of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SIMS. Of certain kinds.

Mr. MADDEN. It provides that milk, garden truck, and other small freight. Now, what is "other small freight?" What does "garden truck" consist of, and what are the kinds of articles to be limited to the right of this road to carry and all that? Then another question I would like to ask is, how far outside of the District line does this road begin?

Mr. SIMS. That is a question that I could not answer, but the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] can. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] to answer all these questions, as he is thoroughly familiar with the bill in all its aspects.

Mr. MUDD. This railroad begins at a point which I find in the bill is designated as Gretta. Gretta is a suburb in the neighborhood of—in fact I may say, adjoining—a place called Riverdale, which is a station on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, just beyond Hyattsville, in Prince George County, Md. It is not over 4 or 5 miles beyond the District line.

Mr. MADDEN. What character of country is it through which this runs outside of the District?

Mr. MUDD. The character of the country in the District as well as outside of the District is almost exclusively rural. It does not run to any place of larger size than Hyattsville, to the extent that you may say it goes to Hyattsville at all. In fact, it runs about half a mile, I think, at the nearest point, of the village of Hyattsville, a village of from 1,500 to 2,000 inhabitants, situated a few miles outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MADDEN. What kind of freight originates within that

Mr. MUDD. The country is composed to a large extent of truck gardeners. I suppose milk, vegetables, just about the kind that were permitted to come in over the railroad that we chartered about two years ago, which comes in over the Anacostia Bridge, just over the line into the District of Columbia.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it proposed to allow these cars to be transferred from one railroad track to another within the District?

Mr. MUDD. There is no provision in the bill permitting that, and I take it for granted it could not be done without such a

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman believe that it is a wise provision to allow a railroad to bring freight onto the streets of the District of Columbia?

I am not prepared to say that I think, as a Mr. MUDD. general proposition, that would be wise. But, as a matter of fact, taking into consideration the character of the population to be served by this railroad and that their livelihood is obtained to a large extent from the proceeds of the products mentioned herein and the further fact that the railroad company does not, in fact, come into the city, properly speaking, at all, but stops, as stated in the bill, at the intersection of Fifteenth street and H street NE., just at the boundary, I think no harm can come to the city by allowing that.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman believe that the city of Washington is going to become a great residence city some time in the future?

Mr. MUDD. I do not see that that has very much to do with the merits of the pending measure.

Mr. MADDEN. What I want to get at is, that if it is going to become a great city, and you allow, in advance of the population living here, freights to be carried on any of the streets of the city, you are putting an embargo on the progress of the com-

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman does not carry in his mind the statement I just made, that the terminus of the railroad in the District of Columbia is in effect in the country, on the line of what was called a few years ago and what is understood now as being the county. It only comes to what is called the "boundary," away out here where the Bladensburg road ends, and from that point, of course, the city

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman mean by the words county line" that it is the boundary line between the Dis-"county line" that it is the boundary line trict of Columbia and the State of Maryland?

Mr. MUDD. Oh, no; it is the boundary line— Mr. MADDEN. What is known as the "city" as distinguished from the District of Columbia?

Mr. MUDD. What was called years ago, and what I think is perhaps properly called now, "the county."
Mr. MADDEN. It would come to Florida avenue?

Mr. MADDEN. It would con Mr. MUDD. Florida avenue.

Mr. MADDEN. That, I submit, Mr. Chairman, is right in the center of the city of Washington now, and it seems to me that we ought not to pass any bill that would give the right to any railroad company to come through the most thickly settled portion

Mr. MUDD. Why, the gentleman does not mean to say that there is any thickly settled portion of the city, or even of the District, out there on that suburban road?

Mr. MADDEN. I may not know that particular road, but I do know this, that outside of Florida avenue the most aristocratic part of the city exists.

Mr. MUDD. Not in the northeast.

Mr. MADDEN. Perhaps not in the northeast. But it seems to me it would be a very dangerous provision to allow to go into any bill an authorization to any railroad company to use the streets of the District or the city of Washington to carry

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have some time allotted to me by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], and I think a little explanation will convince the members of the committee that there is nothing dangerous in this little modest railroad proposition; that there is no monopoly in it; that there is no oppression in it, but that the effect of allowing the road to come into the District of Columbia will be to reduce passenger fares and to the extent that the small truck freight would be allowed to come—and I apprehend that the time will never come when the people of this city will not want vegetables to come in here at reduced rates—will be to very substantially reduce the rate of freight on those small articles.

In the first place, bear in mind, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that this railroad, properly speaking, does not come into the When the gentleman from Illinois spoke of the thickly settled portion of the city in the District of Columbia he evidently had in his mind's eye that portion of the city in the direction of Mount Pleasant and the northwest which is beyond the boundary, and where many fine residences are being constructed and where many have been constructed until it is in fact in some portions as thickly settled as in the heart of the city itself. The terminal of this road in the District is here on Florida avenue, or right about where Fifteenth and H streets NE. intersect. Beyond that is what you might very properly call a county road in that part of the District, and Prince George County, in the State of Maryland, a region that is inhabited by farmers. It is in fact a farmers' road. It is not any giant corporation; there is no trust or monopoly in it; there is nothing of the character of an anaconda about it. a little road running through a section of the District and a section of Prince George County where the people are without railroad facilities because they have not yet had one built, and unless this road is constructed no man along the route of the road will be able to come into the city except by means of the usual class of vehicles that have obtained there, some of them at least, for half a century.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope there will be no attempt to saddle this road with an amendment of the character put on the other railroad proposition just acted upon. This is an entirely different proposition. It will certainly not be for years to come a paying road to any extent, comparing with those inside of the city. It may be answered in reference to this road, as it was contended in reference to the other, that the road may not be built if the rates are reduced. In this connection I would like to say that in the Fifty-second Congress a railroad was chartered over almost identically the same route. I think it was called the City and Suburban. It went from Riverdale, in Prince George County, to Florida avenue, just as this railroad will go, and they were allowed precisely the same fares as are allowed in this bill. The railroad was not built, because the people interested in it could not procure the capital. I happened to have had a rather sad experience in connection with that, because I happened to be one of the incorporators, one of the stockholders, and one of the directors. I was not a Mem-ber of Congress at that time, I want to say in this connection. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. How long is the line that is contemplated?

Mr. MUDD. Altogether I do not think over 8 miles. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Has the gentleman some information as to what it will probably cost per mile?

Mr. MUDD. No; I do not know that. It will be an overhead trolley, just as the other was.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Going to some point out in the coun-

Is it a single or double track?

Mr. MUDD. Double track.

Mr. MADDEN. I will state to the gentleman that it costs about $15,000 per mile to build an overhead-trolley double-track

Mr. MUDD. The information I have given to the House will throw some light on the ability to obtain money. In or about the year 1892-93, under a charter granted in the Fifty-second Congress, I happened to be named as one of the incorporators. I do not know why it was. I suppose they thought that an ex-Member of Congress amounted to something—had, perhaps, some slight prestige that might be useful. Of course I knew to the contrary

Mr. PAYNE. We had a proposition here a few years ago, in a measure for a road to come in from Maryland into the District, providing that they should run freight cars on every line in the District. Is there any such provision as that in this bill?
Mr. MUDD. There is not, I think.

Mr. PAYNE. I have not seen the bill, and I do not know whether that proposition is in it.

Mr. MUDD. I think not. Mr. PAYNE. I remember the House by a very decided majority put in a provision that would prevent their running freight cars in the District on even a single road, and if this bill would allow that, and I ask the gentleman because he is familiar with it, there should be a similar prohibition in this bill.

I think there is no such provision in this bill. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from New York refers to the bill called the "Washington and Surrattsville Railroad," which came in here in the closing hours of the session two years ago. I am frank to say he is mistaken in one respect. railroad, if I recollect aright, did contain a provision that the cars should be allowed to come over what I think is termed the "Washington and Potomac Railroad," which runs from this side of the Anacostia Bridge down near to the Washington Market. That was considered an unusually liberal charter, much more so than is being asked in this bill. Now, I want to say that this bill was introduced in the Senate by the late Senator Gorman, who wanted to gratify and to benefit the people of that section of Maryland through which he passed to go to his home. I introduced the same bill in this House at the same time. The Senate bill is the one now before us. It was reported unanimously.

I am informed by his successor in the Senate and upon the Committee of the District of Columbia of the Senate it has passed the Senate unanimously. So far as my information goes, it was reported unanimously by the House committee. I do not undertake to say that the people interested will not endeavor to build this railroad if they do not get the rates they want. I make no threat or any such statement as that; but, judging from the experience I have related, and as far as my information goes as to the present conditions, I honestly am of the opinion that they could not possibly build the road.

Now, gentlemen talk about the extortions of railroad com-Gentlemen grow eloquent, as they always do grow eloquent, in talking of the exactions and the transgressions of great corporations. Now, what will be the result of not allowing this road to come in here? This line goes from the city limits to Hyattsville, or to Bladensburg and Riverdale. I beg the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shackleford], who made that eloquent speech, to listen to me for a moment.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Was the speech referred to eloquent or vociferous?

Mr. MUDD.

Both, I think; certainly vociferous, and I should say eloquent. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. Are you referring to the speech which I made? Mr. MUDD. To your colleague's. Yours was eloquent, but not so vociferous. Now, the present fare to Riverdale on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad is 20 cents, or a little over. It is 20 cents to Hyattsville, and I apprehend it may be a little more to Riverdale, to which this railroad will go. This railroad will bring passengers in for 10 cents, so you will be preventing the occurrence of those awful things you say are done by big corporations. You will be establishing competition and establishing cheaper rates for passengers by 50 per cent, and you also establish cheaper rates for the little, modest country products that will be brought over this railroad to the city limits, if you allow this bill to go through.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I think if the gentleman will allow me I will ask if his attention has been called to the first section of this bill:

That the Washington, Spa Spring and Gretta Railroad Company, a body corporate under the laws of the State of Maryland, be, and it is hereby, authorized to extend its line of street railway within the District of Columbia with single and double tracks, equip and operate the same for the carrying of passengers, parcels, milk, garden truck, and other small freight, with the necessary switches, turn-outs, buildings, mechanical devices, along the following route: Beginning on the Bladensburg road, or Baltimore and Washington turnpike, at the dividing line between the District of Columbia and Prince George County, Md., thence along said Bladensburg road to Fifteenth street east and H street where it intersects with Maryland avenue and said Bladensburg road.

Mr. MUDD. Yes. Mr. PAYNE. I understood the gentleman to say that this bill did not allow any freight car to run within the District of Columbia.

Mr. MUDD. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman; the gentleman misun-erstood me. Perhaps I did not make myself plain. derstood me.

Mr. PAYNE. I guess you did not understand the question I

Mr. MUDD. I repeat that it does not allow them to come within what are called the "city limits." The point that is here referred to as the terminus this way is just on or about the line of Florida avenue, which is the boundary between the city limits and the country.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman is making a distinction between the city and the District of Columbia.

Mr. MUDD. Unquestionably. I think there is a very great and material difference between running cars in here on Pennsylvania avenue, for instance, and running through what is called the "country section" of the District along a country road and on out into Prince George County.

Mr. PAYNE. I would ask the gentleman whether Fifteenth and H NE. is not within the city limits?

Mr. MUDD. I understand that the intersection of Fifteenth and H NE. is just about upon the boundary between what is called the city and the country, but in the District of Columbia, of course.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman is familiar with the locality. am only asking for information.

Mr. MUDD. Yes; it is right out here on the road to Bladensburg, about where the thickly built up section ends.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MUDD. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Is this district now as thinly settled as was the farther part of Connecticut avenue ten years ago, and which has now become a densely settled part of the city?

Mr. MUDD. I can not answer, because I do not know how thinly settled the part of Connecticut avenue referred to was ten years ago.

Mr. PERKINS. It was very scantily settled.

Mr. MUDD. I do not think it was as scantily settled as the portions of the District through which this road will run. Now, Mr. Chairman, in all fairness, when that time comes, when this portion of the District through which this road runs becomes populous, when it becomes fair and equitable to people along the road and to the taxpayers in the District, and fair and equitable as compared with other railroads, to impose lower rates of travel, then it will be time to consider that; but I think the gentleman will agree with me—certainly he would if he knew anything about the character of this section of the District through which this road is to pass-that this railroad could not be maintained at all if you put the fare down to 4 cents and eight tickets for a quarter. I suppose that the gentleman from New York, Mr. Perkins, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. PAYNE, have not had occasion to go out to that part of the District of Columbia; but I want to say to them that it is little more than a farming locality, and that is the character of the country from where the road begins to where it ends out in Maryland.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is just what I was going to inquire of the gentleman. How far beyond the city terminus of the proposed route are the stock yards?

Mr. MUDD. I do not know that I can state that exactly to the gentleman.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is not a great distance, and that part of the city, as it seems to me, is not well adapted for residential purposes.

Mr. MUDD. No; and will not be for years to come. The Reform School is situated out there; I suppose gentlemen have seen it. It sits on a hill, somewhat isolated, no buildings other than those belonging to the school close to it. The people there are interested in this road, as well as the citizens of Maryland. I will say that I have no objection to acquainting the Members of the House with the people connected with the road. They are all Maryland people, reputable gentlemen of moderate means. None of them have any stock, as far as I am aware, in any railroad in Washington City, or in any other corporation that I know of.

Mr. MADDEN. Put their names in the RECORD.

Mr. MUDD. I shall be very happy to do so. I will name them ere now. They are James C. Rogers, of Hyattsville; J. Enos Ray-and I may say this of him, which ought to recommend him to the kindly consideration of some gentlemen here, that he was the very able floor leader in the last Maryland legislature; I have no especial desire to advance his interests, certainly not politically, although I do not mind doing justice to him financially, as well as to the others and all others of my constituents—Marion Duckett, Fillmore Beall, and Benjamin D. Stephen, who, I am sorry to say, was elected a few years ago on the Democratic ticket as clerk out here in this territory of mine-of Prince George County-and I am sorry to say he got in; but it makes him none the less a good business man of fairly good means and good business integrity.

These people are none of them speculators; there is not a touch of the speculative feature about this measure. It is simply an earnest endeavor by the people who live along the road to try to get into this city without walking or riding in a wagon or other vehicle drawn by horses. I do not think the objection of the gentleman from Illinois, that small freight is to come over the road, is an objection that ought to weigh at all. I am not an expert upon the subject-matter of electric railroads. Since I have been in Congress I have fried a number of times to get some constructed through the country I represent. I have been thus far unsuccessful, because they would run through a sparsely settled country and the needed capital could not thus far be obtained.

I am told by my colleague that in Baltimore city—I assume not in the central portion of it—they allow freight to be brought in on street-car lines from the country. I understand it is allowed in quite a number of other cities.

Mr. MADDEN. Do they allow freight cars in the city?

Mr. WACHTER. Yes.

Mr. MUDD. Now, freight cars containing milk and vegetables and other small products would probably not weigh any more than a passenger car and could probably be kept in as good sanitary condition and state of cleanliness as cars that brought in passengers

I hope that this bill will not be amended. I have no interest in it on the face of the earth except the interest that I feel in every opportunity to build up and bring something like modern progress and prosperity to the sections of my district bordering on this city.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman from Maryland claim that they are going to carry milk in ordinary passenger cars?

Oh, I apprehend not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then they will have an ordinary freight car equipped for that purpose.

Mr. MUDD. When the gentleman says an ordinary freight car, I take it it will not be a freight car of the ordinary kind that we see, for instance, on the Pennsylvania Railroad entering the city.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a box car so built as to operate on these tracks.

Mr. MUDD. On what tracks?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The tracks they are going to build for this road to connect with the tracks running through the Dis-

Mr. MUDD. Assuming that to be true, what harm would that do?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am asking if that is what is intended. Mr. MUDD. I answer frankly that I do not know just the character of cars they do construct where they are used for small freights of this character.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have seen them in some places.
Mr. MUDD. I have not. I know so little about capital and capitalists that I really know practically nothing about these cars. I am a sort of modest farmer myself, like these people I am trying to help get their products into this District.

Mr. GILLETT. I suppose if we allow freight cars on this line we would have to allow them on all other lines, will we not?

Mr. MUDD. Oh, no. Mr. GILLETT. Why not?

Mr. MUDD. Because we allow freight cars going out of the city here, over a route that is as much rural as any portion of the gentleman's district, is no reason why we should permit them to run in the populous sections of the city.

Mr. GILLETT. But after it comes into the city—

Mr. MUDD. It does not come into the city.

Mr. GILLETT. It does not come into the city at all?

Mr. MUDD. No; there is a difference between what is called the "city" proper and what is called the "country," and which is a part of the District. There is a marked line, which is called "Florida avenue" on the one side and the river on the other

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman well knows that was passed years ago, and that long since there has been but little distinction between the suburbs and the city, and that really now what is called the "boundary line" is within a large part of the thickly settled portion of the city.

Certainly; that is the case up here in the Mr. MUDD. northwest, but it simply happens not to be the case where this railroad comes. It simply happens that it has not been built up to this point in this direction.

Mr. GILLETT. But it will be built out there some day, of course.

Mr. MUDD. Well, when it comes to building out there some day in the distant future, I am going to say to the gentleman that I shall look forward with a feeling of security in the integrity and wisdom of the Members of Congress of that future time to look after the conditions that prevail then—
Mr. GILLETT. Then the gentleman admits that freight cars ought not to be in the city.

Mr. MUDD. It may be that a day will come when it will be easier to get bills reported. I do not know. Some gentlemen complain that it is rather difficult now.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman admits, then, that freight cars ought not to come into the city.

Mr. MUDD. Into what is called a thickly settled portion of the city?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. MUDD. I can be satisfied and consistent as to their running over this route, and contend for it, and still not contend that they should come down into the city. We will cross that bridge when we get to it.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman expect this country to be settled out there?

Mr. MUDD. I hope so. I hope this railroad will contribute

And if the country is settled, then does the gentleman think they ought to have a freight-car line on a streetcar track?

Mr. MUDD. Well, I will answer the gentleman in this way and to this extent, that there would not be as good reason for it then as there may be reason for it now. But I will be willing to consider the propriety of removing the freight car under those conditions, if I am in Congress at that time.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I hope the gentleman will be in Congress, one body or the other-

Mr. MUDD. And I would not be happy unless my friend from Illinois remained with me. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I know the District Committee could not get anybody who is as industrious for the District as is the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. MUDD. I will admit a good portion of that. [Laughter.] But it is proper that I should say here that I do not happen to be a member of the District Committee. It is perhaps due to the committee that I say that. I have not been a member of that committee for some years and, I suppose, I must have ceased to be considered a good man for that place.

Mr. SPERRY. To what extent have land speculators through which this road runs an interest in this concern?

Mr. MUDD. To no extent that I know of at all, except that felt by every man in the world who owns a farm. He hopes some day it will increase in value. I hope that it will. It may be said with fairness that almost any section, any rural section, through which a railroad runs will have the value of its farm lands somewhat increased. It is to be hoped so.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say the Bladens-burg road had been widened recently.

Mr. MUDD. In answer to that, Mr. Chairman—and I am glad the gentleman called my attention to it, because I want to say this bill as it stands to-day embraces all the amendments recommended by the Commissioners, except one-when this bill was introduced a little over a year ago and was referred to the Commissioners they reported it back, recommending an amendment to the effect that the railroad be required to widen the Bladensburg road to the uniform width of 90 feet; but since that time a bill then pending in Congress has passed both Houses and become a law by which, in the usual way of providing for opening streets generally in the District, Bladensburg road has been widened or will be widened at the joint expense, if I recall aright, of the city and the landowners along the road. That amendment therefore was omitted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The fact is, that condition being recommended by the Commissioners of the company, the company held up this question of getting the franchise and has had the road widened at the expense of the city, and they now come back to get the franchise without the condition.

Mr. MUDD. No; that is not the fact.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It looks very suspicious.

Mr. MUDD. I will answer quite frankly to my friend by saying that the owners of this railroad in Maryland were not as anxious to have this charter with that burden imposed upon it and upon the railroad, but I will say this, that it ought not to be said that these gentlemen were the instruments of or used for the purpose of having this done. They are none of them, so far as I know, men of any power to influence legislation here; certainly they have no such influence with me, except in so far as the measures they present may seem to me to be possessed of merit.

Mr. MANN. What other purpose was there in widening this ountry road to 90 feet?

Mr. MUDD. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to get this and other roads leading to my district widened for the past ten years. I think it ought to have been widened years ago without any reference to the question whether a railroad was to go over it or not.

Mr. MANN. Is it the customary width for a country road in the gentleman's district to have it 90 feet?

Mr. MUDD. Oh, no. Mr. MANN. What particular object was there in widening this road except for the mere purpose of a street-car line on it? Mr. BABCOCK. Let me answer the question.

Mr. MUDD. I can answer it.

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to say that the residents along the road asked to have it done, and paid the entire expense of widening the road, and it did not cost the District a dollar.

Mr. MUDD. And may I not ask if they have not been endeavoring to get this road widened before this railroad was ever mentioned before the committee or Congress?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Do the people living on the road want this? They do. Mr. Chairman— Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. MUDD.

Did they sign a petition for this road? Mr. MANN.

Mr. MUDD. I do not know of any formal signing of a peti-If I could acquaint the gentleman with the extent of the gatherings I have had in the corridors of this building of people along that line to get this railroad, the letters I have received, and also the action of various citizens' associations of this District and outside, I think he would be fully convinced that every man, woman, and child in that section are almost praying for the construction of this road.

Mr. HULL. Have you any protests against it? Mr. MUDD. I have not, from any source whatever. I understand there has not been a single protest of any man before the District of Columbia Committee or anywhere else.

Mr. MANN. What is the length of this road?

Mr. MUDD. In other words, practically every citizen living out there is asking for this road and no one is protesting against it.

Mr. MANN. What is the length of this road?

I think it is a little less than 8 miles. Mr. MUDD.

That is, in the District? Mr. MANN.

Mr. MUDD. Oh, there are only about 3 miles in the District; perhaps not that much.

Mr. MANN. Is there to be two fares?

Mr. MUDD. There will be one in the District and one out-

Is the gentleman willing to accept an amend-Mr MANN ment to this bill similar to the one just passed by the Committee of the Whole in regard to the previous bill?

Mr. MUDD. I have been arguing for some time, Mr. Chairman, that that ought not to be done because of the very vastly different character of the two projects.

The bill that we have just acted upon comes with its lines down into the thickly settled portions of the city. It is an inter-urban railroad, and, as I take it from its title, is to run from Baltimore city, a fairly well built up and prosperous sort of a village over there in Maryland, to Washington. I do not believe that the railroad for which I am arguing now will for years pay anything like a dividend to the extent of more than 5 per cent, if that much.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman now mean to tell us that the road that we were considering on the previous bill is to run from Baltimore, when the gentleman in charge of the bill assured the House that it only ran two miles and a half out of the

Mr. MUDD. I suppose he meant by that that it was all that was built now.

Mr. MANN. But we had the distinct assurance from the Committee on the District of Columbia, on the previous bill, that the road did not connect with Baltimore and only ran 23 miles outside of the District.

Mr. MUDD. I do not have the good fortune, or maybe ill fortune-I do not know which I should call it-of being a memther of the Committee on the District of Columbia, but I do know that this other bill refers to what is called the "Baltimore and Washington Transit Company."

I think this is all I ought to say. This road which I am now advocating runs almost exclusively through a rural section. It is asked for by rural people, most of them farmers.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that amendments be admitted at any point of the bill without further reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent that it shall be in order to offer amendments to any part of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object to that. Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have my amendment pending, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That the rate of fare which may be charged for the transportation of passengers over the line of said company within the District of Columbia shall not exceed 5 cents per passenger, and six tickets shall be sold for 25 cents, each good for the transportation of one passenger over the whole or any part of said line in the District of Co-

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, in line 18, on page 4, the word "five" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "four;" and in line 19 strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 18, strike out "five" and insert "four;" and in line 19 strike out "six" and insert "eight;" so that it will read:

"Shall not exceed 4 cents per passenger, and eight tickets shall be sold for 25 cents, each good for the transportation of one passenger over the whole or any part of said line in the District of Columbia."

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I hope that the gentleman in charge of this bill will see proper to accept the amendment which I have offered. When the same amendment was offered to the bill that has just preceded it the argument was made by some that we ought not to discriminate, that the line embraced in the other bill was being discriminated against because we made them give a lower rate of fare than was furnished by other railways.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here is an opportunity to extend the effect of that amendment put on the other bill and embrace within its provisions a larger number of these traction com-panles. If it was fair to put the amendment onto the other bill, it is fair to put it onto this. If it was a proper amendment to put onto the other bill, then certainly the House ought not to discriminate in favor of this proposed railroad.

Mr. MUDD. Does the gentleman think it is the same thing to put a provision of this kind upon a railroad that will pay large dividends and a railroad that will run through a sparsely settled section and that will find trouble in living at all, even at 5 cents?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I believe it would, for this reason: These interurban railroads that are being built throughout the country now will result in the building up of a large population along their lines. I believe these gentlemen who are pressing this bill now and who are the owners of large farms in that country will find after while their farms will be divided up into smaller tracts, and a large population will live along the lines of this railroad. I believe there is nothing more healthfui than the extension of a system of interurban railroads. I believe with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Mudd] that they should be permitted to carry small freight into the heart of the city, whether it be Washington or Baltimore. I believe these interurban roads are in the near future to largely take the place of our highways. I believe that they will radiate from every city into the country and build up the farming districts. I believe that this is one of that character. It is meritorious and should receive the approval of this House. But, Mr. Chairman, we should take into consideration not only what conditions are now, but what they must come to be in the near

We are starting; let us start right. Let us compel these transportation companies to start upon a proper basis and give to the people a fair rate of transportation. It will only be a short time until there will be a dense population along this road if it is built, and I hope to see it built, and hope in the near future to see that country have a dense population, when the land will be made many times as productive as it is now.

The gentleman from Maryland says it will kill the bill if we make the company carry passengers for 4 cents and to sell eight tickets for 25 cents instead of six. I think he is mistaken in saying that that road if built will not be a money-making road. I believe it will be a money-making road from the start. I hope it will; and, Mr. Chairman, I would be very sorry to do anything that would cripple it or in any manner prevent it from being a success financially.

Mr. MUDD. How do you account for the fact that when a bill was passed in 1892 or 1893 for the building of practically the same road, with rates of fare the same as provided in this bill, the company actually failed because they could not get people to take stock at those rates?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not know why, but I will say that money was more difficult to get hold of then than now in all sections, and in all sections of the land through which your road runs the land values were much less than they

I want to say, further, in reply to what the gentleman has said, and the same argument was made by the chairman of the District Committee on the bill just preceding this, that it will not do to undertake to check the action of Congress by saying that the corporations will not submit to it. We are not to be told that we dare not do what we ought to do and not to cast a vote for the people that the people demand we should, because the corporations will balk and not carry out the authority given

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman I wish to make a statement, as I had the honor of reporting this bill. To adopt this amendment means what? It means a vote to prevent anyone excepting the present street railroad monopolies or steam railways, who are hauling these people and their little freight, from doing any business for these people. It means to deprive the people along this line in Maryland of such advantage as they would obtain by it. If they are willing to pay 5 or 10 or 25 cents, as far as that portion of this road lying outside of the District is concerned, that is all right. That portion that is within the District we may regulate at any time.

We have just been assured by the chairman of the committee that there will be a bill brought in here after this bill on which such a proposition can be offered. But I may be asked why not place it in this bill? That bill will come up and then it may be carried. This is a Senate bill. It has passed the Senate. The session is getting short, and any kind of an amendment now will perhaps put the matter where it can not be considered at all. I hope the House will pass this measure as it ought to be; and to put an amendment on the bill, whether intended or not, means its defeat. Let us have some competition. Let us have some company show what can be done in competition; and let those rural people out in Maryland have an opportunity to come in here. I know that those people want to do this. believe they are deceiving us in trying to have this bill passed. They are honest, earnest, and sincere. They want it; and I believe this House will make a mistake if we do not pass this bill, pass it quick, and pass it without any amendments. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate be now closed upon the pending paragraph and amendment:

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That the company is authorized to erect and maintain the buildings necessary to the operation of this road, subject to the building regulations of the District of Columbia. The company shall erect and maintain passenger rooms and transfer stations as required by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. All passenger rooms and transfer stations shall be provided with such conveniences for the public as said Commissioners may direct.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "Columbia," at the end of line 25, section 13, the following:

"That after the passage of this act the street-car companies of the District of Columbia shall be, and they are hereby, required to provide and operate separate street cars for negro passengers, and it shall be unlawful for said street-car companies to allow white and negro passengers to ride in the same street car, and for each offense shall be fined $100.

Mr. MUDD. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. The proposed amendment is not germane to the provisions of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. That the company shall, on or before the 1st day of February in each year, make a report to each the Senate and House of Representatives, as prescribed in section 10 of the act of June 10, 1896, entitled "An act to extend the routes of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and of the Belt Railway Company of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a new section, to come in after section 23.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, insert between lines 16 and 17 the following:

"SEC. 24. That the time for the completion of the Anacostia, Surrattsville and Brandywine Electric Railroad in the District of Columbia is hereby extended for twelve months from March 3, 1907."

Line 17, strike out "24" and insert "25."

Line 19, strike out "25" and insert "26."

Amend title to read:

"To authorize the Washington, Spa Spring and Gretta Railroad Company, of Prince George County, to extend its street railway into the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

Mr. MADDEN Mr. Chairman I make the point of order

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not germane to the bill now under consideration.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, that provision extends the charter of another road for twelve months.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill. Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the several bills to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Grosvenor, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bills S. 7042 and S. 3668 and had directed him to report the same to the House without amendment and with a favorable recommendation; also that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 22123 and had directed him to report the same back to the House with amendments and with a favorable recommendation.

WASHINGTON WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the bill S. 7042.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was the bill (S. 7042) to transfer jurisdiction of the Washington Aqueduct, the filtration plant, and appurtenances to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit that bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to this bill at this time, as many of the Members were not present when it was discussed in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. This bill provides for the transfer from the Engineer Corps of the War Department to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of the Washington Aqueduct and filtration plant. It is now being conducted in an economical and satisfactory manner. There is no good reason why the control should be transferred. It seems to me that the transfer should not be made without a very full investigation, and I trust that the House will recommit the bill, in order that for the present, at least, the control of the aqueduct and filtration plant may be left in its present situation.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a word. We have a divided supervision over the water plant which has caused a great deal of friction, and both departments agree that it should be under one head instead of two. I hope the House will concur in the committee recommendation. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the motion. Is the gentleman not willing to let this go over? It is very evident that at present there is no quorum in the House.

Mr. BABCOCK. I have no objection to its going over.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will go over as unfinished business.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Would that make it in order to-morrow? The SPEAKER. No; but it would make it in order on the next District day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection to that.

WASHINGTON, SPA SPRING AND GRETTA RAILROAD COMPANY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union was the bill (S. 3668) to authorize the Washington, Spa Spring and Gretta Railroad Company of Prince George County to extend its street railway into the District of Columbia.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BALTIMORE AND WASHINGTON TRANSIT COMPANY OF MARYLAND.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was the bill (H. R. 22123) to amend an act to authorize the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company of Maryland to enter the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1896, reported with amendments and a favorable recommendation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the same amendment that is to be voted upon in this bill was offered to the bill authorizing the Washington, Spa Spring and Gretta Railroad Company to extend its railway in the District of Columbia, which bill has passed the House, and the amendment was not adopted. House adopts the amendment reported on this bill, it will place itself in the position of adopting an amendment to one bill, and on another bill of exactly the same character refusing to adopt the amendment. I hope the House will refuse to adopt this 4-cent and eight-car-ticket amendment.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, in line 5, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "four." In line 8 strike out the word "six" and insert the word "eight;" so as to read: "Four cents for each passenger and eight tickets for 25 cents."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the first amendment just reported.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. James) there were—ayes 54, noes 61.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, is that a quorum?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I raise the point that there is no quorum.

Mr. JAMES. I make the point, Mr. Speaker, that there is no

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now

MINORITY VIEWS-POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion I would like to ask that the time for filing minority views on the post-office appropriation bill be extended three days. The SPEAKER. If the point of order is temporarily withdrawn, without prejudice, the gentleman's request can be considered.

Mr. JAMES. I will withdraw the point of order temporarily. Mr. HEDGE. I now ask that the time for filing minority views on the post-office appropriation bill be extended for three

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I inquire to what date that will extend the time?

Mr. HEDGE. I do not intend that it shall extend beyond

Thursday

Mr. STAFFORD. But it is contemplated to bring up the post-office bill for consideration on Thursday, and we should have time to consider the minority views.

Mr. HEDGE. I will make it until Wednesday night, then.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his request to Wednesday evening. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. Keliher, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for one week on account of sickness in his family.

PHILIPPINE AGRICULTURAL BANK BILL.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority may have until the close of the legislative day on Wednesday to file minority views on the bill H. R. 25186, the Philippine agricultural bank bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I now insist on the point of order of no quorum.

The motion of Mr. Babcock was then agreed to; accordingly the House (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmit-ting an estimate of appropriation for compensation of certain inspectors of customs at the port of New York-to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for additional land at Edgemoor (Del.) light-house depot—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for removal of snow and ice in the District of Columbia-to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the president of the Spanish Claims Commission submitting an estimate of appropriation for payment of certain awards-to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Maud Polk Johnston, James Polk, and Burns Polk, jr., heirs of estate of Burns Polk, sr., against The United States to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Triune, Tenn., against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Under clause 2, Rule XIII, the following adverse report was delivered to the Clerk, and laid on the table, as follows

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 338) for the relief of John L. O'Mara, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 7590); which said bill and report were laid on the table.

Tuesday, February 12, 1907.

The Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE, delivered the following

Let us now praise famous men, leaders of the people by their counsels, and by their understanding men of learning for the

Without such no city shall be inhabited. His memorial shall not depart and his name shall live from generation to genera-

Nations shall declare his wisdom and the congregations shall show forth his praise.

Let us pray. Be pleased to consecrate to-day to us, Father, its memories, its lessons, its sacrifices for man and for Thee. Not in vain that he lived for us, not in vain that he died for us if we can follow in his footsteps, if we can carry out his purpose, if we are willing to live and die for our country-with charity toward all, with malice to none. Show us each and all how we can bear our brothers' burdens. Show us how to forget ourselves and to live for others, how State can help State and nation can help nation, that this may be Thy world, one world of the living God, alive with Thy life and strong with Thy strength.

Father, we turn back to the memory of such a life as this, and not backward only. We look forward for this country, that it may be that happy nation whose God is in the Lord; that the children of this country may know what it is that they have a country to live in, and that for that country they may be willing to live and die. We ask it in Christ Jesus.

Our Father who art in heaven; hallowed by Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever and ever. Amen.

Resolutions indorsing reclassification and greater compensation for post-office clerks.—Adopted by convention of the National Association of Postmasters, held in St. Louis, Mo., October 3, 4, and 5, 1906.

tion of Postmasters, held in St. Louis, Mo., October 3, 4, and 5, 1906.

Whereas the subject of a new classification of post-office clerks and an increase of pay for them having been carefully and fully considered by the convention of first-class postmasters, held in St. Louis, Mo., October 3, 4, 5, 1906, and it being established beyond a question that because of the era of great prosperity and great demand in all walks of life for competent and intelligent men in every branch of service, trade, or traffic, wages for skilled labor having increased materially, the cost of living in all the cities where large post-offices are maintained also greatly increased; and

Whereas the records of the Post-Office Department show no increase in some clerks' salaries for many years past, and now show an astonishing and alarming number of resignations of these Government employees during the past year or two, greatly in excess of any previous years, giving ample proof that in order to obtain good, efficient, and competent clerks in the service that some better inducement must be held out to them in the matter of pay and classification, otherwise the postal service will be still further seriously crippled, to the great damage of the business interests of this country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that a committee of nine postmasters of the first class be appointed by the president of this association, who, by and with the consent of the President of the United States and the Postmaster-General, will appear before the Congressional Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, as soon as practicable, and present to said committee our most urgent request that for the good of the service they take immediate necessary action of a reclassification and a material increase in salaries of post-office clerks:

Feciassification and a material increase in samiles of post-base terms. Be it Further resolved, That in order that this committee shall be prepared to properly present the question to the said Congressional Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, it is hereby requested that every first-class postmaster in the United States immediately prepare a statement giving number of separations from the service in their respective post-offices and the reason for same during the past fiscal year, July 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, and forward same to the chairman of this committee as soon as possible.

I, Addie Vester, secretary of the National Association of Postmasters, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy from the records of the above and foregoing resolution, and in witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand as said secretary at the city of St. Louis, Mo., this 5th day of October, 1906.

Mr. RAYNER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 2 of the bill, after the amendment inserted after line 20, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That if upon appeal or writ of error it shall be found that there was error in the rulings of the court during the trial a verdict in favor of the defendant shall not be set aside.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, this bill is a very important bill; I think one of the most important bills we have had before us at this session. It changes the whole criminal practice in one regard in the Federal courts. I am opposed to the bill, fearing that it may pass, I have offered the amendment which has been read. I am very frank to say that I would not yote for the bill with the amendment in it, but without the amendment I think it is a perilous undertaking. While I shall only take a very short time in discussing it, I think I can convince almost anybody who will kindly give me his attention that this bill ought not to pass in the shape it is in.

Before I state my objections to the substance of the bill let me give you an objection to the form of the bill, which I do with great deference and respect to the Judiciary Committee. If you look at lines 19 and 20, on page 2, you will find the bill provides:

In all these instances the United States shall be entitled to a bill of exceptions as in civil cases.

Mr. President, there is no bill of exceptions in civil cases in any of these instances at all. I submit to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] in charge of this bill that a bill of exceptions was never heard of in any of the instances he has cited. There is no such thing as a bill of exceptions from a motion quashing an indictment; there is no such thing as a bill of exceptions from a demurrer sustaining an indictment; there is no such thing that I know of, either in the Federal or the State practice, as a bill of exceptions to the overruling of a demurrer to a plea, such as this bill has. My own judgment is that if we intend to pass an important bill of this sort we might as well pass it right.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Georgia? Mr. RAYNER, I do.

Mr. BACON. I am not prepared to say that the Senator's criticism in regard to taking an appeal, from a technical standpoint, is not correct; but I desire to correct one statement he makes, and that is that in no jurisdiction is there allowed a bill of exceptions from a decision upon the various matters specified in the bill now under consideration. In the State which I have the honor in part to represent that is the exact writ upon which an alleged error on such questions is taken from the circuit court up to the supreme court for consideration-a bill of exceptions,
Mr. WHYTE. That is by statute.

I stated that in no State that I knew of was Mr. RAYNER. that the case. Of course you may have a statute of a State that gives you a bill of exceptions, but neither at the common law nor in any State where the common law is in vogue is there any such thing as a bill of exceptions in any of the cases mentioned in this bill. It is by appeal or writ of error. Of course you may have a statute giving you a bill of exceptions. If the court overrules the testimony, you must have a bill of exceptions in order to acquaint the appellate tribunal with the facts that occurred in the court below, because the testimony does not go in the record; but when you are quashing an indictment or sustaining a demurrer, it appears in the record, and an appeal carries up the record, so there is no necessity for a bill of exceptions. That, however, is only a minor point, but I think it ought to be changed, and we ought to say that in all these instances the United States should be entitled to a writ of error or an appeal, if you want to perfect the bill.

I am opposed to the substance of the bill, Mr. President, and I will state briefly why I am opposed to it. I am not particular about the form of my amendment. I am perfectly willing to accept any suggestion that may improve it. The amendment reads in this way:

Provided, That if upon appeal or writ of error it shall be found that there was error in the rulings of the court during the trial, a verdict in favor of the defendant shall not be set aside.

I have another proposition here, which I have not offered in the shape of an amendment, but which might perhaps be acceptable to me. It carries out the same idea. It reads in this

In all these cases the judgment of the inferior court shall not be reversed nor in any manner affected, but the decision of the Supreme Court shall determine the law to govern in any similar case which may be pending at the time the decision is rendered or which may afterwards arise.

Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. RAYNER. I do. Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to the fact that that suggestion of his would make the case simply a moot case, and the Supreme Court would never consider it.

Mr. RAYNER. Well, if by making a case a moot case you mean where a man is found to be not guilty it enables the court to find him guilty, then I am in favor of making a moot case out of it. I am coming to that in a moment.

There is nothing new about the proposed amendment at all. I have copied ft from the legislation of several States. I have no objection, if there is a motion made to quash an indictment upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of the law or a demurrer is filed, that the Supreme Court shall finally determine whether or not that law is constitutional, so as to have some uniformity of decision in the Federal courts; but I will never consent to the case being tried over again if the defendant has been acquitted upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of the law.

The Senator from Minnesota calls it a moot case, but where a man has made a motion to quash an indictment upon the ground that the law is unconstitutional and goes to trial and the court acquits him and it is sought to provide that the Supreme Court can reverse the lower court and have the case tried over again, it is no moot case, so far as the defendant is concerned.

But let me go on and the Senator will understand my point. I have given some examination to this subject; I have had occasion to do so at other times. I want to state this proposition and I do it again with great deference to the Judiciary Committee and especially to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox], who I understand proposes to advocate this bill, because must say there is no member of the American bar whose legal opinion I respect more than I do his opinion-but I want to say that if there is any one phrase in the law upon which there is an irreconcilable conflict of opinion it is upon the question as to what constitutes jeopardy. There is the trouble. If we knew what "jeopardy" meant there would be no trouble about it, because a man can not be put twice in jeopardy, either at common law, under the Constitution, or, I apprehend, under the statutes or constitutions of any of the States.

But what is "jeopardy?" Listen to this a moment. Here is one of the best authorities we have. He has made a summary of the law on this subject. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon], without sustaining them entirely, in the course of his argument read the citations from Abbott. I say, with great deference to Mr. Abbott, that his definition of "jeopardy" is wrong and that the text writers and the authorities have rejected it long ago. Listen to this definition of "jeopardy" and then, Mr. President, see whether it is not necessary to incorporate into this bill just precisely the provision that I have placed in the amendment in order to prevent a man from being tried twice for the same crime. Here is Mr. Abbott's definition:

A person once placed upon his trial before a competent court and jury, charged with his case upon a valid indictment, is in jeopardy.

I apprehend that no lecturer upon criminal law would venture to tell his class that that is a definition of jeopardy. Let us see how he follows this up:

When a person is placed on trial upon a valid indictment before a competent court and a jury he is put in jeopardy.

All the time he has to be placed on trial before a competent court and a jury.

Mr. SPOONER. And under a valid indictment.

Mr. RAYNER. And under a valid indictment. Mr. Abbott

Whenever a person has been given in charge, on a legal indictment, to a regular jury, and that jury is unnecessarily discharged, he has once been put in jeopardy.

The last quotation I will give is this, because the definition is wrong if the later authorities, in fact, any binding authorities that I know of, are to be taken as decisive of this question:

Whenever a valid indictment has been returned by a competent grand jury to a court having jurisdiction, the defendant has been arraigned and pleaded, a jury been impaneled and sworn and charged with the case, and all preliminary things of record are ready for the trial, jeopardy has attached.

Mr. President, there is no necessity in the world for having a jury before a man can be put in jeopardy; none whatever. man can be tried before the court and be put in jeopardy. In my State, for instance, the defendant can select his method of trial. He can be tried before the court, and the State has no choice in the matter. He is in jeopardy. But the authorities have gone way beyond that. A man can be put in jeopardy, as I know the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] will recollect, by being tried before a magistrate. The leading case at common law on this subject was decided by Blackburn and Lush. I have the case here, and I will give it to you in a moment. In that case a prisoner was tried before a magistrate, not on preliminary hearing, but on the merits. He was acquitted, and he was indicted and tried again by the Court of King's Bench. The court unanimously held that he had been put in jeopardy, and that was the end of it. Therefore Abbott's definition is wrong. I only want to show you—and I am anxious to show this to the Senator from Pennsylvania—that there is no accurate definition of "jeopardy.".

There is no man can say actually what "jeopardy" means. I understand, Mr. President, that I have not the right to define | wanted to try him over again, and, while it is true that a mathe word "jeopardy." I am fully aware of that. It is a constitutional provision, and we would not have any right in an act of Congress to define what "jeopardy" is.

Mr. SPOONER. It is a judicial question.
Mr. RAYNER. It is a judicial question, and I would not have any right to define it or limit it or qualify it in any

I have drawn this amendment in such a manner as not to define what "jeopardy" is. I have merely used this phrase, and I have taken it from other statutes, as I will show. I have said that a defendant shall not be tried again, call it " ardy" or not. I put myself on the basis that when a man is once tried and once acquitted, no matter what an appellate tribunal may do-it may settle the question for the future and for all pending cases, but the defendant ought not to be tried again.

Let me show that I am right about the conflict of cases. I have read from Abbott. Let us look at what Mr. Bishop says on this subject—and I only intend to quote a few authorities. He experiences the trouble of trying to define what "jeopardy" He says, speaking of "jeopardy:"

The subject of this subtitle is in its nature difficult and intricate. It is rendered more so by much conflict in the decisions. So that we are here required to accomplish the not always easy task of following the principles while not departing from the discordant cases.

And then he proceeds to accomplish a task that he fails to accomplish and which is utterly impossible of accomplishment. How is it possible to follow the principles without departing from discordant cases?

When we look at the encyclopedia we encounter the same difficulty. If there was an absolute definition of "jeopardy," if we could all define what "jeopardy" meant, there would be no trouble about this bill; but I want an amendment in it that does not reach the word "jeopardy" at all. I want a plain provision, as they have in some of the States, that when a man is once tried and acquitted, no matter what the judgment of an appellate tribunal may be, that man shall not be tried over again; and even if it is surplusage, it does not hurt to put it in the bill. Let us see what is said in the encyclopedia about this word concerning which the cases are in conflict:

The general rule established by the preponderance of judicial opinion and by the best-considered cases is that when a person has been placed on trial on a valid indictment or information before a court of competent jurisdiction, has been arraigned, and has pleaded, and a jury has been impaneled and sworn he is in jeopardy.

That ought to be the law, but it is not. Then the author goes on to say:

But in some jurisdictions it is held that jeopardy does not attach until a valid verdict either of acquittal or conviction has been rendered.

And then is given an utterly irreconcilable array of conflicting decisions upon the entire subject.

I want to show you how far my own State has gone. I think the court has gone much further than most States on this subject; and while I do not want to pass any criticism on any case in my own State, I can not find a case that sustains this case. I refer my friends to this case—the case of Hoffman v. The State of Maryland (20 Md., 475). A man was indicted for murder, and when the case was in progress the State's witnesses-some of the State's witnesses-failed to answer.

This is the case:

The plaintiff in error being indicted for murder jointly with one Robert Miller by the grand jurors of the State of Maryland, for the city of Baltimore, and being arraigned, severed in his defense, and pleaded not guilty. On the 25th of October, 1859. a jury was impaneled and sworn. The State's witnesses being called did not answer; attachments were issued, and the court was adjourned to the 26th of October, 1859. The attachments being returned non est, the following proceedings were entered of record.

I will not read the entire proceeding.

In this case the jury was discharged. When the man came to be tried over again he put in the plea that he had been once That man was in jeopardy, but the court said not. If that is the law, then the State can abandon the case at any time while it is in progress, because some of the State's witnesses are returned non est. The State might go on with its case, the defendant might be ready, and some of the State's witnesses might either be returned non est or not be present, and the prosecuting attorney, not being able to prove his case, the jury would be discharged and another indictment found. That man is in jeopardy. There are any number of authorities that hold that the defendant is in jeopardy in a case of that That illustrates the conflict.

But the worst trouble we encounter in regard to the meaning "jeopardy" is in the Federal courts. We have a case in 195 United States, which is about as troublesome a case as you can find, and I want to call particular attention to this case. There was a man tried before a court and acquitted. They jority of the court held that he could not be tried over again in an appellate tribunal, there were three dissenting opinions in that case—the dissenting opinions of Justices Holmes, Mc-Kenna, and Brown. In that case is quoted the leading common-law case, the case of Wemyss v. Hopkins (Law Reports 10, Queen's Bench, 378), where it was held that a conviction before a tribunal of competent jurisdiction, even without a jury, was a bar to a second prosecution. That case was as follows:

The appellant had been summarily convicted before a magistrate for negligently and by willful misconduct driving a carriage against a horse ridden by the respondent, and was afterwards convicted on the same facts for unlawful assault.

It was held that the first conviction was a bar to the second, and Blackburn and Lush rendered the celebrated opinion with which we are all familiar, because it is one of the leading cases at common law upon the subject of jeopardy, and they held that the defendant could not be tried over again.

In order to show the Senate what a dilemma we are in, just listen for one moment. Let us look at the Federal case in 195 United States. Mr. Justice Holmes announced a dissenting Here are three judges who dissent and hold that a man can be tried over again. If there had only been one judge absent and one more judge dissented, you would have had a divided court on the question. I am not criticising the opinion of Justice Holmes, but just listen to this opinion for one moment and see if it does not occupy an isolated position upon the proposition before us. Judge Holmes says you can try a man as many times as you want, provided you never leave the case. That is what you are doing in this bill. You are going to hang a man up and suspend him until, through the machinery of the Federal court, you may finally convict him. I am giving you word for word here what Justice Holmes held in this case

It is more pertinent to observe, and it seems to me that logically and rationally a man can not be said to be more than once in jeopardy in the same cause, however often he may be tried.

You can try him just as often as you want, provided you try him in the same cause, and he is never in jeopardy.

The jeopardy is one continuous jeopardy from its beginning to the end of the cause. * * * There is no rule that a man may not be tried twice in the same case.

I say, respectfully, there is a rule—a rule ever since the beginning of the common law—that a man can not be tried twice in the same case.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the case? Mr. RAYNER. This is the opinion of Mr. Justice Holmes in the case of Kepner v. The United States, the Philippine case (195 U. S.), and Justice Holmes is a man of profound learning. Mr. KNOX. Is not that a dissenting opinion?

Mr. RAYNER. I say it is a dissenting opinion. Three judges dissented. If another judge had dissented and one judge had been absent, you would have had a divided court on a definition of jeopardy.

Mr. SPOONER. Can the Senator from Maryland conceive of any means by which stability of opinion upon such a question can be absolutely assured for all time in the court?

Mr. RAYNER. I do not know of any way in the world in which you can do it, and for that reason I want a plain provision in this bill that a man once tried shall not be tried again, jeopardy or no jeopardy. Then the court can decide whether he has been in jeopardy. But once tried and once acquitted, no matter on what point tried and acquitted, that ought to be the end of that man's trial. I have not used the word "jeopardy" in the amendment. I want to steer clear of it. I am afraid of it.

Mr. SPOONER. The object of the amendment is to guard a man against an erroneous decision of the Supreme Court of the United States as to the meaning of the word "jeopardy in the Constitution.

That is not at all the object of the amend-Mr. RAYNER. ment. He is guarded now against jeopardy. I say when you take him to the Supreme Court, let the Supreme Court rule upon the question, so as to have uniformity of decisions. If it is possible to get from the Supreme Court uniformity of decisions upon any question, let us have it, but let the decision only apply to future cases.

Mr. KNOX. I wish to ask the Senator a question. When you speak of a man being "acquitted," do you mean technically acquitted by the verdict of a jury or dismissed by the court and freed from the burden of trial for any other reason? I want to know the sense in which you use the word "acquitted."

Mr. RAYNER I mean where there has been a verdict of not guilty, whether by the court or the jury, and judgment on that verdict. That ought to be the end of that case. It has been the end of the case for hundreds of years until this legislation was precipitated here. I am coming to the reasons that brought about this contemplated legislation. I am opposed to the whole spirit of it, from the beginning to the end. My objection goes a little deeper than any objection I have stated

Mr. President, let me finish the opinion of Justice Holmes:

If a statute should give the right to take exceptions to the Government, I believe it would be impossible to maintain that the prisoner would be protected by the Constitution from being tried again.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me a question?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Is it the contention of the Senator from Mr. NELSON. Maryland that where an indictment has been quashed or a demurrer to an indictment has been sustained, the defendant can not be tried again? Do not all the authorities hold that in all such cases if the indictment is bad the case may be submitted to another grand jury and the defendant may be indicted and tried again on a new indictment? It does not follow that the quashing of an indictment or the sustaining of a demurrer or a motion in arrest of judgment terminates the prosecution. In all those cases if the indictment is bad the court can order the case to be submitted to another grand jury and the defendant can be reindicted and tried.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator from Minnesota has asked three or four questions, and he has given three or four answers, I suppose satisfactory to himself; I am sorry to say not to me. We must discriminate. Law is a science of discrimination. You can not jumble up motions in arrest of judgment and motions for defects in indictment and the unconstitutionality of a law in one question.

Let us discriminate, and before I finish I will answer every question the Senator asked, and I will show him that while he right in one proposition he asserts, he is wrong in the others.

I say to him now, if there is a motion in arrest of judgment for a defect of form, the man can be tried again on another indictment. We all know that. The defendant at the proper time makes a motion in arrest of judgment for defect of form. The court grants the motion. It arrests the judgment because of some defect in the indictment. The grand jury can find another indictment against him.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President-Mr. RAYNER. In one minute.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the Senator's attention to a decision of the supreme court of his own State. It is the case of the State of Maryland v. William Sutton, where a man was convicted upon an indictment containing two counts, one count charging him with committing the crime of rape and another count charging him with an assault to commit rape. He was convicted. A motion in arrest of judgment was made. motion was granted. The attorney-general of the State took an appeal to the supreme court of Maryland, and the supreme court held that the motion in arrest of judgment had been improperly granted. Here are the final words of the decision:

The verdict was imperfect, and the matter in issue not so ascertained as that the court could render any judgment thereon, and therefore it was a mistrial. The county court erred in discharging the prisoner. The court should have awarded a venire de novo. Judgment reversed and procedendo awarded. (State of Maryland v. William Sutton, 4 Gill's Rept., pp. 494-498.)

There is a case in the Senator's own State where a writ of error was taken to the supreme court of the State upon motion in arrest of judgment.

Mr. RAYNER. I want to say to the Senator from Minnesota that while I am very much obliged to him for giving me a decision in my own State, both my colleague and I are rather familiar with those decisions. Each of us has occupied the office of attorney-general of our State, and I have quoted that case half a dozen times. It shows what I said, that the Senator will not discriminate. Where there is a motion in arrest of judgment and the judgment is arrested, the defendant can That is an elementary proposition of law. No be tried again. one

Mr. NELSON. What about a motion to quash an indictment? Mr. RAYNER. Let me answer your questions one by one. We have disposed of the first question. The judgment is arrested on a motion made by the defendant, and one of two things takes place. The defendant can either be tried again under the same indictment, provided the motion in arrest does not go to the indictment, but goes to some other part of the record. If the motion goes to the indictment, there must be a new indictment. There is no use discussing that further. It is an elementary proposition.

Mr. NELSON rose.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask the Senator not to interrupt me on this legal proposition. I am coming to the other class of cases in a

Mr. NELSON. Allow me a question in that connection, and that is this: Has not this man, according to your doctrine, been in jeopardy? According to the doctrine you advocated a moment ago with respect to jeopardy, has not this man been in jeopardy, when a verdict of the jury was rendered upon the indictment and the motion in arrest of judgment made?

Mr. RAYNER. He has never been in jeopardy for one moment, and the Senator will see it, if he will examine the case.

Mr. NELSON. When is a man in jeopardy?

Mr. RAYNER. Let us get down to the cases. He has never been in jeopardy, upon the principle that he has arrested the jeopardy by his own motion, and the authorities state that while the jeopardy may attach, that the jeopardy can be arrested by the motion of the defendant. This is a rule, however, subject to exception.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly. Mr. KNOX. May I ask the Senator from Maryland if the provisions of this proposed act do not apply exclusively to motions made by the defendant? A motion to quash is a motion made by the defendant; a demurrer to the indictment is the action of the defendant, and a motion to arrest judgment after verdict is the act of the defendant. Now, does not the defendant in all these cases arrest his jeopardy?

Mr. RAYNER. He does not, and I shall show the Senator he does not.

Mr. KNOX. I should like, then, for the Senator to distinguish between the question I have put to him and his answer to the question of the Senator from Minnesota. Mr. KNOX.

Mr. RAYNER. I will; because the defendant need not make any motion in these cases, and yet the indictment may be quashed. I will give the Senator a case. The court can quash it without motion. I will come to that in a minute. I know exactly what the Senator thinks upon that subject. It is not an unbending rule, one not without exceptions, that every time the defendant makes the motion it arrests the jeopardy. But it is an answer to the proposition of the Senator from Minnesota, and that is that a motion in arrest of judgment suspends the jeop-Let us take a case.

Mr. KNOX. Let me put a question right here. When is a demurrer by the defendant to the indictment an act of the defendant which arrests his jeopardy?

Mr. RAYNER. I doubt very much whether a demurrer by the defendant to the indictment upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of the act will arrest jeopardy. I am coming to that, and I will give you the cases.
Mr. NELSON. Mr. Presid

Mr. President-

Mr. RAYNER. Will not the Senator let me proceed for about five minutes?

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. RAYNER. I suppose I will have to.
Mr. NELSON. I do not want to take up the time unless it is satisfactory

Mr. RAYNER. It is not very satisfactory.

Mr. NELSON. Let me put the case to the Senator from Maryland on the motion to quash an indictment. Suppose the motion is granted and the indictment is quashed. Has the defendant been put in such jeopardy that he can not be tried again?

Mr. RAYNER. That illustrates the point I made. The Senator from Minnesota will not discriminate. You can quash an indictment upon a dozen different grounds. What ground does the Senator speak of? You can quash an indictment for defect of form. You can quash it upon the ground that the law has been repealed. You can quash it upon the ground of the un-constitutionality of the law. You can quash the indictment upon the ground that the grand jury has not been properly impaneled.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—— Mr. RAYNER. One moment. The Senator from Minnesota mixes and confuses all these grounds and seeks an opinion upon all of them when an opinion that would apply to one would not apply to the others.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President-

Let me proceed. I beg the Senator's pardon. Mr. RAYNER. The Senator will have his own time. I want to say that I am not before the Senate to allege that a man can be put in jeopardy twice. I want a provision put in this bill that he can not be tried twice. I want to get rid entirely of the word "jeopardy," and then the Supreme Court can decide in each case whether the defendant has been put in jeopardy or not. But when a man has been once tried and acquitted that ought to be the end of it, jeopardy or not. Let me go back and finish this quotation, because I want to give some authorities on that.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. RAYNER. Of course I have to yield, but I would rather

Mr. PATTERSON. It is for a question. The question I want the Senator from Maryland to answer is this, having the pend-ing bill as the basis of my question: How in any case can a defendant who has been tried and acquitted make any of the motions that are provided for in this bill? These motions are only made where the ruling is against the Government. A motion to quash must be against the Government. The decision on a demurrer must be against the Government. arrest of judgment is after there has been a trial and a conviction, and not a trial and an acquittal. If a motion in arrest of judgment is sustained—and that is the only one of the three cases in which there can have been a trial—the motion in mind to be presented to the court—if the defendant has been tried and convicted and then he interposes a motion in arrest of judgment and his motion is sustained, and then a writ of error taken to an appellate tribunal, that is not a case in which the defendant has been tried and acquitted, and he can be put to trial again. It is a case in which he has been tried and convicted, but the court for technical reasons, whatever the reasons may be, sees fit to arrest the judgment that would follow on the verdict of the jury or the finding of the court in that case, and the case goes to the appellate tribunal. If there should be a reversal, I can not understand how a man is put in jeopardy the second time, because he has never been acquitted.

It is always in case of a trial and conviction in the matter of an arrest of judgment, and in the other two cases, a motion to quash or a demurrer, the motions must ex necessitati be made before jeopardy attaches.

Mr. RAYNER. Is that your question?

Mr. PATTERSON. It is one of those questions which I could not put without making a speech.

Mr. RAYNER. I know; but I have made that same speech.

I agree with you entirely in every word you say. That is what I have been trying to show to the Senator from Minnesota. Let the Senator from Colorado convince the Senator from Minnesota, not me. I agree with him. When a judgment has been arrested—I will say for the third time—the man is not in

Let us get on to another matter. I have said twice that no one can contend that where a judgment is arrested on motion of the defendant he has been in jeopardy.

Mr. PATTERSON. But how can any provision of this bill put him in jeopardy?

Mr. RAYNER. If you will let me come to that, I will gladly do so. In the cases I have cited here I have reached the point where everyone on this floor must admit that there is a great conflict of decisions upon the definition of the word "jeopardy." I have already stated the ground upon which I want this amendment put in the bill. I have gone along and said that where upon motion of the defendant judgment is arrested, he is not in jeopardy. If you will only let me get to the cases where it is doubtful whether he is in jeopardy or not, a class of cases I want to reach, then I will get to the end of this argument. I want to finish what Justice Holmes says in this opinion, which is more important than other collateral matters which do not affect the question here at all. I will read it again, and I ask the attention of the Senate to it:

If a statute should give the right to take exceptions to the Government, I believe it would be impossible to maintain that the prisoner would be protected by the Constitution from being tried again. He no more would be put in jeopardy a second time when retried because of a mistake of law in his favor than he would be when retried for a mistake that did him harm. (Kepner v. United States, 195 U. S., 135.)

Mr. President, now let me give a class of cases where the trouble occurs. Suppose, for instance, a defendant is put on trial. He is arraigned, pleads not guilty, employs counsel, the testimony for the prosecution is heard, the testimony for the defense is heard, and at the end of that case the court mere motu, not upon the motion of the defendant, announces upon an examination of the authorities that it believes that the act under which the prisoner has been indicted is unconstitutional, and it acquits the prisoner. Should that prisoner be tried again? You can not answer that question, because there are half a dozen cases one way and half a dozen the other, and, with the greatest respect to the eminent members of the profession on this floor, that question can not be answered satisfactorilywhether the man has been in jeopardy. With the great respect I have for the opinion of the Senator from Colorado, he can not answer it, because if he says the man has been put in jeopardy he will be met with authorities which say he has not been, and if he says he has not been he will be met with authorities that say he has been put in jeopardy.

These are not moot cases. They have oc-Another case. curred in the different States. It is a familiar practice in my own State for a court to decide a case on points never raised by counsel. My distinguished colleague and I once had a very important case in Maryland, and we thought we understood it. We argued it below, and we won the case. It went to the court of appeals, and we thought we had thoroughly argued it, and after we had finished the court decided the case against us upon a point that never occurred to either counsel on either side of the case, and there the decision stands. Over and over again our courts decide cases upon points that are not raised by counsel.

Let me give two other cases. I am not dogmatic upon this point.

Having studied the question, having annotated the authorities upon the subject of jeopardy, I am in great doubt as to what jeopardy means, and I want a plain provision in this bill, not defining what "jeopardy" means—I can not do that; I am aware of that; I can not give a legislative construction to a constitutional provision-but I want a plain provision put in this billnot an invention of my own, but copied from the statutes of some of the States and copied from a law that you gentlemen passed here in the Senate-providing that in no case where the defendant had been acquitted shall he be tried again, no matter what the ruling of the appellate tribunal may be.

Let me give you another case. You go on to trial. The man is arraigned. He pleads. He employs counsel. The testimony for the prosecution is taken. The testimony for the defendant is taken. At the close of the case the court says upon an examination of the statutes it has come to the conclusion that that statute has been repealed by subsequent legislation; and we know that sometimes among these hundreds and hundreds of Federal statutes, with their unjust and unmerited punishments, it is almost impossible to tell whether a statute has been repealed by implication by the enactment of subsequent laws. Ought that man to be tried again? He has been ready for his trial. He has called his witnesses. He has employed counsel. He is ready to go before the jury. The court holds that the statute has been repealed. The prosecuting attorney takes the case to the Supreme Court of the United States and it says, "The law has not been repealed." Ought that man to be tried again? I am not prepared to say that that man has been in jeopardy. I am not prepared to say that that man has not been in jeopardy. I am prepared to say that that man ought never to be tried again in any tribunal governed by the common law.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President—

Mr. RAYNER. One moment. Let me give you one other case

Will the Senator permit me to put one question? It will not be long.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.
Mr. KNOX. I think it goes to the meat of your amendment and to the point of this bill. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland, I understand, is that there shall be no retrial after a man has been acquitted. Am I correct in that state-That is the substance of the amendment—there shall be no trial after the defendant has been acquitted.

Mr. NELSON. Acquitted by the verdict of a jury. Mr. RAYNER. I have in the amendment no suc Mr. RAYNER. I have in the amendment no such words as "acquitted by the jury." I have nothing to do with the jury. He may be acquitted by a magistrate if it is on the merits, as it was in the common-law case. There it was a trial before a parliamentary magistrate on the merits. That ought to be the end of that man's trial, and no supreme court on earth ought to have the power to try that man again. I do not care by what tribunal he is acquitted, if it is a tribunal of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. KNOX. Now I will finish my question, with the permission of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator from Minnesota interrupted me. Mr. KNOX. I do not want the Senator to understand necessarily that my questions all indicate antagonism to the views he has set forth here this morning, because there are many things the Senator has said with which I agree entirely. But for the purpose of considering the amendment I should like to have the Senator indicate where under this bill there is any writ of error or appeal given to the United States where the defendant has been acquitted.

Mr. RAYNER. What is the verdict in the case I have given?

What verdict does the court find? Where the court holds that the law is unconstitutional, what is the verdict in the Senator's

Mr. KNOX. Courts do not render verdicts with us: juries render verdicts, and the courts pronounce judgments.

Mr. RAYNER. It is not that way in our State. A court may render a verdict and a court may pronounce judgment, because the prisoner has a right to be tried before the court, and you can not deny him that right. The practice is different in the different States. Let us take a jury trial, however, and suppose that proceedings have progressed to the point I have indicated, and then the court holds the law unconstitutional. What is the verdict and what is the judgment in that case? What is done in that case in the Senator's State, if he knows? The Senator does not know and no one knows-

Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. RAYNER. What is done in the State of Wisconsin in a case of that sort?

Mr. SPOONER. I did not hear the Senator.
Mr. RAYNER. You heard the case—my illustration?
Mr. SPOONER. No; I did not.

Mr. RAYNER. I beg pardon. A man is arraigned on an indictment. He pleads not guilty. He employs counsel. The testimony for the prosecution is heard. The testimony for the defense is heard, and the defendant is ready to go before the And at the end of the case the court says that upon an examination of the statute it believes the statute to be unconstitutional, and it quashes the indictment upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of the statute upon which it is founded. What is the verdict and the judgment in Wisconsin? I know what it would be in my own State, but not in any other State.

Mr. SPOONER. The court would direct an acquittal by the jury

Mr. RAYNER. Do you think that man ought to be tried again?

Mr. SPOONER. I will get to that.
Mr. RAYNER. I want you to get to it, and get to it slowly and surely. I say under this proposed statute you could try that man again. That is my point, as I have indicated to the Senator from Minnesota. That man will be tried again under the proposed statute. In other words, you open the doors under this proposed statute. If there was no appeal taken the man could not be tried again.

Let me give another case, a case that comes right home to als bill. Suppose there is a plea of limitations. Suppose a man is indicted. I want to say to Senators I have had little criminal nisi trial practice; I do not want it. I tried two criminal cases, murder cases, when I first came to the bar, for the prisoners, and I felt worse than either of the men did.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President-

Mr. RAYNER. One minute. I say I felt worse than did either of the men, who ought to have been hanged, and I made up my mind that I could not practice criminal law at nisi prius. About a week after that time I was offered the position of State's attorney for Baltimore city, which I accepted for the moment, but in about a week I came to the conclusion that I could not prosecute a man. I felt every time I prosecuted a man that I was prosecuting his wife and children. I have, as attorney-general, had four years' practice in the appellate tribunals, and it became my duty, in connection with the State's attorneys for the different counties and cities, to try these cases

My colleague has had the largest criminal trial practice in the State of Maryland-perhaps as large a criminal trial practice, as well as any other practice, as any lawyer here. I think he agrees with me upon the views I have taken.

I am speaking now of what is the law, and I want to be distinctly understood, so as to have no mistake about it. I am not defining jeopardy. There are questions that can be asked me as to what is jeopardy or what is not jeopardy that can not be answered. I merely say when a man is tried and when he is acquitted he never ought to be tried again. I do not care what he is acquitted on.

Let me give this plea of limitations case now. Suppose a plea of limitations is not filed in time. In our State we file what is called a ne recipiatur—that the plea be not received. Suppose the Government files a plea of ne recipiatur and the court overrules the plea and the Government takes an appeal. An acquittal is directed upon the plea of limitations. Now, can you try that man over again? One author say you can. Another says you can not. The Encyclopedia says that when a man has been tried upon the plea of limitations you can not try him over again. He has risked his case upon the plea of limitations, has been acquitted, and you can not try him over again. In this bill you permit him to be tried over again, because you take an appeal to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court holds that the plea of limitations was not filed in time, that the man has never been put in jeopardy, and he is

In order to show my friend that this amendment is not new, that this is no innovation of my own, I want to put in what was stricken out in the original bill. Why did the Judiciary Committee strike this out? The words that were stricken out of the original bill occur on lines 6, 7, and 8. Read it and it will not be considered that my argument has anything peculiar at all about it or that there is anything novel about the point I am making. Lines 6, 7, and 8 read:

That if on such a writ of error it shall be found that there was error in the rulings of the court during the trial, a verdict in favor of the defendant shall not be set aside.

Why was that taken out of the original bill? Why was it not left in there? I want that put back. It is the best thing that you can do—to put this back into this bill. It was put into the District of Columbia bill. There is therefore nothing startling about it. I am just trying to extricate ourselves from this howling wilderness of confusion upon the subject of what constitutes legal jeopardy. Here is the District of Columbia bill that the Senate passed giving the appeal:

Provided, That if on such appeal it shall be found that there was error in the rulings of the court during the trial, a verdict in favor of the defendant shall not be set aside.

Not only that, but you will find this same provision in the laws of Arkansas, of Nebraska, and of Nevada. I like the Nevada law better than I do any other. In Arkansas it is provided that judgment in favor of the defendant which operates as a bar to future prosecution of the offense shall not be reversed by the supreme court. In Nebraska you find a provision

The judgment of the court in the case in which the bill was taken shall not be reversed nor in any manner affected.

This is good law. Why not put this in?

But the decision of the supreme court shall determine the law to govern in any similar case which may be pending at the time the decision is rendered or which may afterwards arise in the State.

Why not put the Nevada law in? In Nevada there is a provision that an appeal taken shall in no case stay or affect the operation of a judgment in favor of the defendant.

Texas has a provision in her constitution that an appeal shall not be taken by the State. I think the Senator from Texas, perhaps, will tell me whether I am quoting the points correctly or not in the constitution of Texas, giving no right of appeal at all in criminal cases to the State. Twenty States have refused to give the right of appeal in criminal cases, and out of the other States that have given them half of them have a provision similar to my amendment. They are not defining "jeopardy," they are simply reiterating a principle which has existed from time immemorial, that when a man is once tried and once acquitted, no matter by what tribunal, if it is a tribunal of competent jurisdiction, he shall not be tried again.

Now, in conclusion, I do not propose to go to work and pass a law for 80,000,000 people to remedy the erroneous judgment, perhaps, of a judge in a single case, and that is all that this law seems intended for. We never heard of it until that decision. I want to say that I believe that decision was right. I have carefully examined it. I think if Judge Humphreys

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the very case to which he refers no appeal could have been made under this bill. No appeal on a writ of error could have been taken under this bill for the reason that the issue of fact was submitted to a jury and the jury found in favor of the defendant upon that plea in bar. Under this bill that case could not be appealed to the Supreme Court of the United

Mr. RAYNER. That is just what I have said. I said you could not have taken an appeal.

Mr. NELSON. Not in that case, because the defendant had

He had been tried by a jury on that issue. I said you could not have taken an appeal been in jeopardy.
Mr. RAYNER. in that case, and that is the reason why this law is proposed.

It is to give an appeal in a case of that sort.

Mr. NELSON. This proposed law does not give an appeal in Mr. NELSON. This proposed law does not give an appeal in a case of that kind. It gives an appeal from the decision or judgment sustaining a special plea in bar when not put in

Mr. RAYNER. You can raise precisely the same question by special plea in bar. The Senator from Minnesota knows why this law is being urged and precipitated. As far as I am concerned, I do not suppose anyone has stood out here longer and more strongly than I have against all the combinations of railroad companies or trust companies or any other companies when they are violating the law. I have gone to the extreme point on that question, and I stand here ready to enforce the law with the severest punishment when there is any violation of it.

But I am not prepared to pass such a law to-day for 80,000,000 people, perhaps because a judge has made a mistake in a given case. I think the judge was right, but even if he was wrong I am not in favor of changing the common law. This is a perilous matter that we are engaged in. This is a perpetual matter. We have gone along for over a hundred years without it and now in a moment we are to revolutionize the practice of the appellate tribunals of the United States. We have gone along for centuries under the common law without it and now, because a judge in a given case gave an opinion that did not suit somebody, we are asked to pass a law which endangers the liberty of our citizens. Men may not have been put in jeopardy, and there are hundreds of cases where a man ought not to be tried again whether he was put in jeopardy or not.

The Senators from the South have seen men dragged from their homes to northern prisons for violations of law that they were innocent of. We are not so much concerned with the common carriers violating the law and with people violating the Sherman trust act in my jurisdiction. I am not afraid to trust the inferior courts of the United States with the adjudication of those cases. Find better judges and you will have better decisions, and if your judges are not honest, then there is a remedy.

Let me give you, in conclusion, a case that expresses my sentiments better than I can, from a great judge, and one of the greatest judges who ever sat in a State tribunal of this Union. Let me read what he says about this condition and I will finish what I desire to say.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] knows these judges. He was a student with one of them. They are great names with us in Maryland—Joseph Henry Lumpkin and Eugenius A. Nisbet. This is Judge Nisbet's opinion. It is very short. I want to give it to you. Speaking of jeopardy, he held that a writ of error did not lie to the court in a criminal case at the instance of the State, except to settle future cases. It ought never to lie. If the constitutionality of a law is involved, let the Supreme Court of the United States decide upon the constitutionality or the unconstitutionality of the law. I am perfectly willing to vote for a law of that sort, and that decision will be binding thereafter in every case that arises upon the law. But I am unwilling to go beyond that. I am not willing that the case should have a retroactive effect, virtually an ex post facto effect, and convict a man who has been already acquitted before a tribunal of competent jurisdiction. Now, let us see what was said in this case:

These principles are founded upon that great fundamental rule of the common law, "Nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa," which rule, for greater caution and in stricter vigilance over the rights of the citizen against the State, has been in substance embodied in the Constitution of the United States.

That means what I have been contending for to-day, that no man should be twice tried for the same cause.

man should be twice tried for the same cause.

The trial of a citizen for a violation of the criminal law is a very different thing from the trial of civil rights between two citizens. The forms of procedure and the principles upon which they proceed are different. * * If there is, by reason of the offense charged, an injury done, especially to any one person, he has a remedy for the wrong. In criminal trials the State—the supreme authority, that authority which makes the law and prescribes its penalty and executes its judgments—moves against the citizen. * * It is a salutary precaution in favor of the citizen against an abuse of the sovereign authority; for history teaches the melancholy truth that however fenced and guarded, limited, and defined by laws or usages, it sometimes breaks over all these barriers, defees the sentiment of the world, and, in the name of the law, violates justice and outrages humanity. The reign of the Stuarts in England illustrates these views. That the state will not, in this signally favored country, thus abuse its powers, is not only hoped, but believed. Vigilant for right and liberty, we will not trust her, but hold her steadily to the just limitations within which the wisdom of other states and past generations have circumscribed her.

Now, Mr. President, in conclusion, I am opposed to this law upon still another and a broader and a higher ground.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland will kindly suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary

The Secretary. Table Calendar 26, Senate resolution 214, by Mr. CARTER.

Mr. NELSON. I I ask that the unfinished business be tem-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Maryland will proceed.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I could not state my conclusion any better than the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] stated it the other day. Just in a few words, as concisely as it could be put, he made the whole objection that lies to this bill. I am opposed to it upon the grounds stated by him. I am opposed to it, but, as I have said, upon a broader ground.

We are here, Mr. President, day by day legislating in the interest of centralization. The Executive, it seems to me, is day by day encroaching upon constitutional limitations; and now we are to commence with the judiciary and enlarge the powers of the Supreme Court and give it a jurisdiction which is more of the Supreme Court, and give it a jurisdiction which, in my judgment, violates the cardinal principles of the common law, is against American precedent, and, what is worse than all, in-fringes upon the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, you can count me out of this performance, do not know how long I will remain here, but so long as I am here I will to the last degree with all my humble strength resist every enlargement of Federal power, whether in the hands of the legislative, the executive, or the judiciary departments, that is not demanded by the absolute requirements or necessities of the American people.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, if I entertained any such view of this proposed legislation as suggested a few days since by the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] and repeated to-day by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], I would be most earnest in my opposition to the bill.

The Senator from Maine stated exactly my position when he said that the old-fashioned doctrine that a man should not be placed twice in jeopardy of life or limb for the same offense was good enough for him. It is good enough for every American citizen, and whether he willingly yields his assent to that doctrine or not, it is the doctrine of the Constitution, and he must bend to it.

Mr. President, if I thought there was a single line, or a sen-nce, or a clause contained in this bill which by any court would be construed to place a man twice in jeopardy, I would vote to cut it out, not because there would be any necessity for cutting it out, as it would be invalid under the Constitution of the United States, but I would vote to cut it out upon the ground that it would not be an artistic and intelligent bill with such a provision within its borders.

Mr. President, before proceeding to say anything—and I propose to say very little-as to the merits of the bill, I wish to correct an impression that the Senate must have from what the Senator from Maryland has just stated, that this is an entirely new proposition; that it has been sprung on the Senate because of some very recent things that have occurred in the judicial history of the United States. Such, Mr. President, is not the case, and in respect to this I speak of personal knowledge, because I can say to the Senator from Maryland that as long ago as 1902 I had the honor, in a report to the Congress of the United States, when I held the position of Attorney-General of the United States, to recommend this legislation to Congress and it is my impression that I was not the first Attorney-General to make that recommendation.

Mr. President, this legislation is along the line of the law as it is understood in England under the common law. the line of the action by a great majority of the States of the United States. In England the Crown always had the right to an appeal in a criminal case. In my own State since its foundation the right has been conceded. Our courts have always said that it exists except where limited by statutory provision. If I had the time I could enumerate from the report of the committee at least twenty-eight States where the provisions of their statutes are substantially the same as those contained in the pending bill.

Mr. President, the question of what or what is not jeopardy is a most material one for our consideration. I quite agree with the Senator from Maryland that it is extremely difficult to define what jeopardy is; and we get our best notion of jeopardy from the decisions of the courts which say what is not jeopardy under the particular circumstances. I quote from the law writers:

Jeopardy, in its constitutional and common-law sense, has a strict application to criminal prosecution only. (In re McClaskey, 37 Pac., $54, 858, 2 Okla., 568.)

A defendant is not in legal jeopardy within the meaning of the constitutional restriction until he has been put upon his trial before a court of competent jurisdiction, upon an indictment or information which is sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction. Thus a plea of former jeopardy, which merely alleged that defendant had formerly been informed against for the same offense, but did not allege that he had been put on trial, was demurrable. (Klein v. State, 60 N. E., 1036, 1037, 157 Ind., 146, citing Cooley, Const. Lim., 6th ed., 399; Rowland v. State, 126 Ind., 517, 26 N. E., 485; Dye v. State, 130 Ind., 84, 29 N. E., 771.)

Where an indictment was so defective that, if the defendant had been convicted under it, he could have had any judgment entered up against him reversed, there is no jeopardy, and the solicitor is authorized to ask for a nol. pros and indict anew. (White v. State, 49 Ala., 344, 347.)

Where an indictment is quashed on demurrer, the defendant is not in jeopardy under it, and may be prosecuted under a second indictment for the same offense. (State v. Gill, 33 Ark., 129, 131.)

"Jeopardy" is not synonymous with the words "twice put on trial," and there is a wide difference between a verdict given and jeopardy as a verdict whenever the jury are charged with the person, and the offense—

And this comes nearer being a definition of jeopardy than any I have been able to find-

And this comes nearer being a definition of jeopardy than any I have been able to find—whenever the jury are charged with the person, and the offense is punishable by death, and the indictment is not defective, he is in jeopardy of life, and accordingly, if discharged without a verdict, he can not be tried again. But where a person is put on trial under a bad indictment he may be tried again, though acquitted, because his life was not in jeopardy, and the court could not have given judgment against him if he had been convicted. (United States v. Gilbert, U. S., 25 Fed. Cas., 1287, 1300.)

Jeopardy does not attach if, after a verdict against accused, it has been set aside on his motion for a new trial. (People v. Travers, 19 Pac., 268; 77 Cal., 176.)

Jeopardy does not attach if, after a verdict against accused, it has been set aside on arrested judgment. (People v. Travers, 19 Pac., 268; 77 Cal., 176.)

Jeopardy is not considered as attaching, although the jury has been sworn, if the defendant is erroneously convicted and obtains a reversal of judgment. (Lovett v. State, 14 South., 837, 838, 33 Fla., 389; "jeopardy," within the meaning of the Constitution, is meant lawful jeopardy from the commencement of the proceedings until their termination by a proper judgment and sentence or acquittal, or what the law regards as such. Where, either for want of jurisdiction or from some defect in the indictment, or from such error in the course of the proceedings, the verdict is set aside or the judgment arrested on a writ of error brought by the defendant or on a motion made by him, and he is tried again, he is not thereby put in jeopardy a second time. (Commonwealth v. Wheeler, 2 Mass., 172, 174; Commonwealth v. Peters, 53 Mass., 12 Metc., 387; Commonwealth v. Roby, 29 Mass., 12 Pick., 496, 502; Commonwealth v. Laby, 74 Mass., 8 Gray, 459; Commonwealth v. Gould, 78 Mass., 12 Gray, 171; McKee v. People, 32. N. Y., 239; People v. McKay, N. Y., 18 Johns., 212; State v. Walters, 16 La. Ann., 400; Jones v. State, 15 Ark., 2

I ask the indulgence of the Senate to read about a page and a half from Bishop on Criminal Law, volume 1, sections 1024-1030. I have made the selection of these excerpts with the greatest care, and because I think they will be of use to Senators in making up their minds about this bill.

ators in making up their minds about this bill.

Rights of State to have proceedings reversed.—In England writs of error, the practical object of which is generally to bring whatever appears of record under the review of a higher tribunal, seem to be allowable to the Crown in criminal causes; but the courts of most of our States refuse them and refuse the right of appeal to the State or Commonwealth, except where expressly authorized by statute, as in some States they are. In Maryland the State may have a writ of error at common law to reverse a judgment given on demurrer in favor of a defendant. And in some other States questions of law may, without specific statutory direction, be reviewed by this proceeding or by appeal on prayer of the State. The question is not free from difficulty; but probably some judges have refused the writ to the State from not distinguishing sufficiently between cases in which the rehearing would violate the constitution and cases in which the prosecuting power has the same inherent right to a rehearing as a plaintiff has in a civil suit.

Common law impediments to rehearing.—It should be borne in mind that the constitutional provision under consideration is not the only impediment to the rehearing of a criminal cause. It is the only one not removable by legislation; but, when legislation has not interfered, and the question depends on common-law principles, there may be various other absolute bars to a further trial.

Validity of statute authorizing rehearings.—Whatever the terms of a statute providing for the retrial of criminal causes, or a reexamination of the proceedings, it will not ordinarily be interpreted, and will never have force, to violate the constitutional provision under consideration. If the jeopardy has once attached, there can be no second jeopardy without the consent of the defendant, whatever the statute may direct. It will apply only where it constitutionally may.

Reversal by State after trial.—A statute which undertakes to give to the State the right of appea

But-

Reversal before jeopardy.—Before jeopardy, any reversal of proceedings, whether on prayer of the State or of the defendant, may be had without prejudice to a fresh prosecution.

Valid indictment quashed—Judgment on invalid.—If, without a trial, the court quashes a valid indictment, or enters judgment for the defendant on his demurrer, believing it invalid, a trial may be had after the prosecutor has procured the reversal of these proceedings; because, as we have seen, the prisoner is not in jeopardy until the jury is impaneled and sworn. And the same consequence follows where a judgment of conviction has been rendered on an invalid indictment.

But-

Proceedings regular down to trial.—Where the indictment is sufficient and the proceedings are regular before a tribunal having jurisdiction down to the time when the jeopardy attaches, there can be no second jeopardy allowed in favor of the State on account of any lapse or error at a later stage. This doctrine should be considered in connection with what was said under our last subtitle, else it may be misapplied.

For example-

Quashed at detendant's prayer.-If-

And I take it this is the nub of the whole proposition-

And I take it this is the nub of the whole proposition—

If at any stage of the proceedings a defendant procures an indictment to be quashed, he can not be heard to assert, in bar to a new one, that the first was good and he was in jeopardy under it.

Court without authority.—If the court has no jurisdiction over the offense, or derives its existence from an unconstitutional statute, or is holding a term not authorized, or is otherwise without authority in the premises, the defendant is not in jeopardy, however far the tribunal proceeds. In most or all of these circumstances the final judgment is not voidable, as mentioned in a previous section, but void; so that his unreversed conviction is no more a bar to another prosecution than his acquittal.

Concurrent jurisdiction (magistrate's—court-martial).—But if the tribunal has authority, concurrent with another, or exclusive—whether it is an inferior one, as a justice's court, a court-martial, or the court of a municipal corporation, or is a superior one—a conviction or acquittal in it will be a bar to subsequent proceedings in whatever court undertaken.

The plea.—The plea, usually put in at the arraignment, is an essential part of the proceedings. And, until an indicted person has pleaded, he is not in jeopardy, though a jury has been sworn to try him or even though there has been an actual trial. But the similiter appears not to be essential.

Mr. President, from these authorities, it seems to me, the fol-

Mr. President, from these authorities, it seems to me, the following can be deduced: If a defendant, as is provided by this bill, demurs to an indictment and the court sustains the demurrer, and the prosecutor appeals, and the court sustains the appeal and reverses the judgment on the demurrer, the defendant was not in jeopardy, because he defeated his right to a verdict by his own act.

It is the same in case of motion to quash as well as in case of a motion in arrest of judgment after verdict if the motion is sustained.

Suppose, however, the prisoner is acquitted upon a valid indictment. I agree with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] that no statute could constitutionally open anew the question of his guilt upon any appeal for errors at the trial, and this act does not propose to give any such appeal. This bill allows to Government an appeal only from-

Defendant's motion to quash or set aside indictment;
Defendant's demurrer to indictment;
Defendant's motion, successfully made, in arrest of judgment for insufficiency of the indictment;
A judgment sustaining defendant's special plea in bar.

These proceedings are all defendant's acts before a verdict to prevent a trial, except the motion in arrest of judgment, which is defendant's act after a verdict against him to defeat a judgment on the verdict. These motions of defendant rest upon the want of jurisdiction of the court, the unconstitutionality of the statute, or some other lack of right to proceed to trial or to judgment on the verdict, the effect of all of which is to defeat the jeopardy. Mark this: It is not proposed to give the Government any appeal under any circumstances when the de-fendant is acquitted for any error whatever committed by the court.

We can not give the Government an appeal or writ of error in any case where a judgment of reversal would put the defendant again in jeopardy, and this bill does not undertake to do so. It gives the Government an appeal only when the defendant has been successful in defeating his jeopardy by defeating the trial.

The Government takes the risks of all the mistakes of its prosecuting officers and of the trial judge in the trial, and it is only proposed to give it an appeal upon questions of law raised by the defendant to defeat the trial and if it defeats the trial.

The defendant gets the benefit of all errors in the trial which are in his favor, and can challenge all errors in the trial which are against him. It is certainly not too much when he attacks the trial itself or the law under which it is conducted to give the people the right to a decision of their highest courts upon the validity of statutes made for their protection against crime.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the position of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] with reference to this bill, it seems to me, is somewhat of a reflection against either the intelligence or the sense of justice of the members of the Ju-diciary Committee who reported it. After listening with great care to the remarks of the Senator from Maryland, I am convinced that his attitude arises wholly from a misconception of what this bill intends.

The Senator asks why a certain provision that was in the bill, which came from the House of Representatives, was not retained in the bill as it now stands. The reason is conclusive that the House bill was so completely changed by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate that such a provision would have been wholly improper and have rendered the bill, as reported by the Senate committee, thoroughly inartistic, if I may use that term. The changes made in the bill by the Judiciary Committee show how solicitous the Senate committee was as to the rights and the privileges of a defendant who has been once in jeopardy. The House bill, as it came to the Senate, provided for writs of error to the Supreme Court, or the court of appeals, in every instance, and in every case in which a defendant was entitled to a bill of exceptions and a writ of error; in other words, the bill, as it came from the House, permitted writs of error on matters of evidence given before a jury on the trial of a criminal case; writs of error as to the instructions of the court to the jury; bills of exceptions and writs of error in every possible contingency where they might be demanded by a defendant.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Gallinger in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Allow me to make a suggestion in that connection, which is, that the House bill allowed an appeal even where the defendant had been acquitted by the verdict of a jury; which would be altogether meaningless.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; and the Senate committee curtailed the bill as it came from the other House and eliminated from it everything that might seem to be responsive to the objections made by the Senator from Maryland, and, instead of allowing writs of error and bills of exception in every case in which a defendant in a criminal case would be entitled to them, the committee limited the writs of error and bills of exception to four particular specific cases, in neither one of which, Mr. President, was it possible for jeopardy to have attached; and because it was impossible for jeopardy to have attached in either of the cases in which writs of error are allowable to the appellate court, the provision in the House bill covering the matter of jeopardy was not incorporated in the Senate bill. Let me read what the House bill was:

That in all criminal prosecutions the United States shall have the same right of review by writ of error that is given to the defendant, including the right to a bill of exceptions.

With that sweeping, broad provision it is absolutely necessary, Mr. President, if the rule of jeopardy is to be preserved, that the provision which the Senator from Maryland insisted should be incorporated in this bill should be in the House bill, which is:

Provided, That if on such a writ of error it shall be found that there was error in the rulings of the court during the trial, a verdict in favor of the defendant shall not be set aside.

Under the Senate bill there can be nothing which occurred on the trial submitted to the appellate court. Therefore the necessity for the proviso in the House bill does not exist and would be wholly improper in this bill.

Now, Mr. President, is there any jeopardy under any definition, do not care how broad or indefinite or definite the definition of "jeopardy" may be? I maintain, whatever the definition is, that no jeopardy can attach in cases in which writs of error will lie under the Senate bill, bills of exception and writs of error being, first-

From the decision or judgment quashing or setting aside an indict-

That is, as a rule, before pleading. The motion to quash an indictment is, as a general rule, filed before the prisoner is required to plead guilty or not guilty. If the prisoner pleads guilty or pleads not guilty in order that the motion to quash may be heard and decided by the court, the plea of not guilty is set aside or held as not having been made.

Mr. SPOONER. And they ask leave of the court to withdraw it.

Mr. PATTERSON. And they ask leave to withdraw the plea of not guilty.
Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. SPOONER. A request which is always granted.
Mr. PATTERSON. So that nothing that squints at jeopardy has existed up to the time the court has passed upon the motion to quash the indictment.

What is the next?

From the decision or judgment sustaining a demurrer to an indictment or any count thereof.

A demurrer is simply another form of a motion to quash. demurrer simply reaches the insufficiency of the indictment to put the defendant upon his trial, and therefore it also is interposed before the defendant is required to plead. If he has pleaded before the demurrer can be heard and determined, the request will be made to withdraw the plea of the defendant until the demurrer has been heard and passed upon by the court. I skip from the second to the fourth because the third ground is one of an entirely different class.

From the decision or judgment sustaining a special plea in bar, when the defendant has not been put in jeopardy.

A special plea in bar, Mr. President, is a plea that does not relate to the guilt or innocence of the defendant in the sense as to whether he did or not commit the act for which he was indicted. A special plea in bar is that which is set up as a special defense notwithstanding the defendant may be guilty of the offenses with which he is charged; it is for some outside matter; yet it may have been connected with the case. The special plea in bar that was filed by the indicted Chicago packers is a very good illustration of that. Their plea in bar set forth the fact of their having been induced or led, whatever it may have been, to make communications to the law officers of the Government with reference to their business that gave the district attorney information which enabled him to bring about the indictments and to help in their prosecution. That had no reference to the guilt or innocence of the accused. It was a pleading of fact that was independent of the crime for which those packers had been indicted.

Therefore, Mr. President, there could be no jeopardy in a case of that kind where there was a decision upon the special plea in bar, because it is not under a plea of guilty or not guilty that the insufficiency of a special plea in bar is determined; it is non obstante whether the defendant is guilty or not guilty.

In neither of these three instances, Mr. President, is it possible that there could have been jeopardy in any sense under any definition that can be found in the decisions of any court of record. So that all that the Senator from Maryland has said upon the subject of preserving to an accused all the rights and privileges that attach to the rule of jeopardy, as we find it contained in our constitutions and the records of the courts, had nothing whatever to do, nor did it relate in any wise to either of the cases in which the writ of error would lie, to which I have called the attention of the Senate.

From the decision arresting the judgment for conviction for insufficiency of the indictment.

Mr. President, it is utterly impossible that a writ of error would lie in a case where a defendant had been found not guilty. The motion in arrest of judgment can only be made—it is wholly inapplicable to any other condition than that of conviction—to a verdict of guilty. It is interposed after a verdict of guilty and before judgment for an alleged legal reason that will arrest the court in pronouncing judgment upon the verdict. Therefore if a motion in arrest of judgment is sustained, and the Government takes its writ of error to the court of appeals or to the Supreme Court, it is not a case of putting a man twice on trial for the same offense who had been acquitted in the first instance. It is a case in which the defendant has been tried, in which he has been found guilty on the merits of the case, and by reason of some technicality, if I may use the term in its broad sense, the hand of the court is arrested from imposing the penalty upon him.

So, Mr. President, in either of these cases the writ of error is taken to the Supreme Court, and in each instance it must be taken to the Supreme Court by the Government, because the defendant would have the right to do those things quite independently of the enactment of this bill.

If the Supreme Court shall reverse the decision of the lower court, it is not putting the defendant in jeopardy the second time, for in the case of sustaining the motion to quash he had not been in jeopardy; in the case of a demurrer being sustained he had not been in jeopardy; in the case of a special plea in bar that went against the Government the defendant had not been in jeopardy on the merits of the case; and in the case of the arrest of judgment the defendant had not been in jeopardy, because, Mr. President, he had been convicted; he had not been acquitted; and if the Supreme Court should hold that the action of the lower court in sustaining the motion in arrest of judgment was erroneous, then, Mr. President, the defendant could not complain, either if the judgment of the court shall be entered upon the verdict or a new trial shall be ordered, because it is giving to the defendant a new opportunity to go acquit when, under the trial that was had, he had been consisted.

The reason, Mr. President, that I, as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, favored this bill is this: Without this bill in the criminal laws there is liable to be the greatest confusion throughout the country. Congress passes a law, and we find that the district court—it may be of Ohio—will render a decision that the law is unconstitutional. The district court in the State of Kentucky may render a decision that it is constitutional. The decision of one district court is in no manner binding or conclusive upon another district court. of such courts are only persuasive, and not controlling. They may be controlling within the jurisdiction in which they are rendered, but they are not controlling outside of that jurisdic-And we would have, Mr. President, this strange and extraordinary condition as we have had it-and to my mind it is a disgrace to the judiciary of the country that such things should be witnessed. We have a district court in one jurisdiction holding that a law is ineffective for one reason or another-it may be that it is unconstitutional, or for some other reason-and we have a district court in another jurisdiction holding the reverse; and as the cases multiply in the several sections of the country we may find one half of the courts of the country arrayed against the other half of the courts of the country upon the same identical law; one half holding that it is entirely constitutional and the other half holding that it is unconstitutional. So, Mr. President, that confusion, that ridiculous condition, exists and must continue to exist, because, as the law now stands, until a case involving the question shall go to the Supreme Court and it is brought there by the defendant, there can be no adjudication by a court whose decision and

I am quite willing to have it said, so far as I am concerned, that the decision of Judge Humphreys in the Chicago case led to the legislation that is now proposed. Why should it not, Mr. President? If it calls the attention of the country to a condition of our laws that is absurd, that leads to injustice in one half of the country and to justice in the other half, to a condition of our laws that will permit the same law to be held constitutional in one half of the country and unconstitutional in the other half, and have a citizen committing an act that is not an offense in one half of the country but is an offense in the other half of the country, the same act being done without any fear of consequence in certain States in the Union and leading to the penitentiary, it may be, in other States in the Union—if that condition has been brought to the attention of the country and of Congress, Congress has done right to grapple with the question and to make it possible to eliminate such a status from the laws and their enforcement in the United States.

I would have been, Mr. President, as rigorous as the Senator from Maryland in protesting against any interference in any way with the right of protection under the law of once in jeopardy. We can not afford in this country to in anywise weaken the protection that the statute law and the Constitution afford. This bill, Mr. President, in nowise does it. It does not even wink at it, if I may use that term in connection with a grave and dignified subject such as this. The bill is intended to cure a defect in the administration of justice, a defect that should be cured as speedily as possible if the decisions of our courts are to be received with the dignity and confidence that the decisions of all of the Federal courts should meet with throughout the country.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to send to the Secretary's desk some amendments which I propose to offer to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire the amendments read at this time?

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to discuss the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendments will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 2, line 2, after the word "taken," it is proposed to insert "on objection to the sufficiency of the indictment in matters of law;" on page 2, line 21, after the word "objections," to insert the words "by the United States;" and on line 22, after the word "form," to strike out the word "only" and insert the words "or law."

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if the right of appeal intended to be provided for by this measure is confined to jurisdictional questions, the question of jeopardy passes out of consideration. A man can only be placed in jeopardy by a trial in a court having jurisdiction to try the matter. The amendment which I have proposed confines the operation of the proposed review by the appellate court to the questions of jurisdiction. The question of jurisdiction involves the question of the legality or binding force of the statute under which the man is held for trial. That is a jurisdictional question. It involves the question of the manner of the execution of the law, that it shall be in accordance with the provisions of the statute. That is jurisdictional.

If the courts do not proceed along the lines laid by the statute, then the party has not been in jeopardy under any rule asserted by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] or the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] or the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson]. He has been in jeopardy only when the trial might result in a binding verdict against him.

In line 2, page 2, I have proposed, after the word "taken," to limit the effect of the right of review, so that it will read as follows:

That a writ of error may be taken on objection to the sufficiency of an indictment in matters of law.

Those words "in matters of law" are broad enough to cover every possible question of jurisdiction.

Then I propose, in line 21, to limit the right to take this appeal by inserting after the word "objection" the words "by the United States;" so that it will read:

That hereafter all objections by the United States to the sufficiency of the indictment in matters of form—

Then I propose to insert-

And it continues-shall be made and determined prior to the empaneling of the jury.

It would not be safe to leave out those words of limitation, "by the United States," because to leave them out would prohibit a defendant, who may discover in the hour of the execution of the judgment that the indictment was defective, from entering objection. The defendant should have the right, up to the very last possible moment, to take objection to the legal sufficiency of the indictment. As the bill comes to us for consideration there is no limitation in favor of the defendant. has often happened that when the trial court has entered judgment and passed sentence upon a defendant and an intermediate tribunal has affirmed the action of the trial court upon a question of law as to the sufficiency of the indictment being presented to a member of the Supreme Court of the United States, a writ for the review of the proceedings of the lower courts has been granted and an order issued suspending the execution of the judgment, perhaps the party having been sentenced to be hanged. So it is absolutely important, if we are to pass this bill at all, that these words of limitation shall be inserted in it. Otherwise it strikes at an existing right of a defendant.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.
Mr. RAYNER. I am compelled to leave the Chamber for a moment. Will the Senator permit me to add to my amendment just a word?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. RAYNER. So as to read "during the trial and verdict or judgment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am confident that the Judiciary Committee did not intend to take away from a defendant any right now possessed by such defendant under the law to appeal from a decision against the defendant. They intended evidently by this legislation to enlarge a right of the Government without interfering with the right of the defendant. Where the court holds that a law is unconstitutional, and that therefore the indictment is bad, because of no authority to bring it, or where the court holds that an indictment is bad, when as a matter of fact it is in conformity with the statute (one going to the right to indict and the other going to the manner of the indictment), I have no particular objection to the right of appeal being given the Gov-ernment if taken before the trial, in order that the court may determine it at that time, before the defendant is put to the expense and the annoyance and the other incidents of a trial.

Those are instances that already have been in the minds of those who propose this legislation. The decision of Judge Humphreys and the decision of the court in Tennessee on the question of the employers' liability act involved those two ques-I believe if those questions are raised by the United States before the trouble and the expense of a trial the hands of the trial court may safely and properly be stayed until the sufficiency of the law or the sufficiency of the indictment may be tested by the highest tribunal in the land. Then if the highest tribunal in the land sustains the court below, that will be the end of the trial. If the highest court in the land reverses the action of the court below, then the trial will proceed and the defendant will have the benefit of knowing that those questions involving his right to the defense based upon an attack upon the indictment have been adjudicated, and it resolves itself down to a question of fact.

All lawyers of long experience have known of cases where defendants, under erroneous advice that the indictment was bad and that it might be safely relied on to set aside a verdict or judgment upon the verdict, have allowed their cases to be tried carelessly, relying upon these legal questions that afterwards proved to be an insufficient reliance. If those questions are settled before trial, upon appeal by the Government of the United States, the defendant goes to trial with an absolute certainty that the law has been determined; and the amendment which I propose simply provides that the Government shall raise its objections to the indictment before the impaneling of a jury. The party is not in jeopardy up to that time. The machinery of the court has not laid its hand upon him up to that time. He is merely charged, and he has not been brought within the limits of jeopardy. Jeopardy can not exist where there is no jurisdiction, because the question of jurisdiction is an undetermined one until a judgment is executed, and may be raised, as has been suggested, in the various ways-for instance, on a motion in arrest of judgment.

Mr. President, I would be compelled to vote against this bill so long as it would deprive the defendant of the right, up to his last hour on earth, to call the attention of the court to a defect in the indictment or a defect in the proceeding under the statute under which the indictment was found. I could not vote for a bill, no matter how good its other provisions might be, that would take from the defendant that right. This bill as it comes to the Senate does take away from the defendant that right. I would vote for the measure cheerfully if the defendant were protected in his existing right to raise these questions at any time up to the final execution of the judgment, and, coupled with that, if the rights proposed to be given to the United States by this bill are limited. The bill reads now:

That a writ of error may be taken by and on behalf of the United States from the district or circuit courts to the Supreme Court or the circuit courts of appeals, * * * in all criminal cases, in the following instances.

Then it cites the instances appropriate to the accomplishment Then it cites the instances appropriate to the accomplishment of this class of legislation. It does not limit the grounds upon which the United States may take an appeal. The United States should never be allowed to take an appeal upon questions of fact or upon the rulings of the court as to the admissibility of testimony pending the trial. The burdens upon those charged with the violation of law are sufficiently heavy at presentations. ent to put us on guard against adding unnecessarily to them for the accomplishment of a purpose that on its face does not pertain to the rights of the defendant, but to the rights of the Government rather. So I have proposed the amendment limiting the right of writ of error, providing that it may be taken only on an objection to the sufficiency of an indictment in matters of law

Mr. President, I do not think the provisions in lines 19 and 20 are essential to the bill in any way. The matter of a bill of exceptions will not arise under any of the provisions of this bill. An exception to the ruling of a court is settled under the rules of the court and not by virtue of an act of Congress or of any legislative body. The manner of settlement of a bill of exceptions is provided for by the rules of the court. That a party is entitled to except to the rule is sufficiently provided within the general provisions of this bill. The bill of exceptions is simply an evidence, the party having taken an exception, that that exception has been allowed by the court; and the court does not strictly allow a bill of exceptions. It settles a bill of exceptions to conform to the facts, showing that an exception was taken.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. CULBERSON. I may have misunderstood the Senator from Idaho, but I understood him to say that he wants to amend lines 11 and 12 so as to read:

From the decision or judgment quashing or setting aside an indictment on matters of law.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; the Senator misunderstood me. not referred to lines 11 and 12. My amendment is confined to line 2 and to line 21 and to line 22.

Mr. CULBERSON. I note now the proposition of the Sena-I invite his attention to the suggestion that at the present time the United States is not permitted in criminal cases a writ of error on any ground. This bill specifies the grounds upon which that right shall exist so far as the United States is concerned. I will ask the Senator if that does not necessarily exclude all other cases, so that the amendment suggested by him is unnecessary?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I see the point of the Senator's suggestion, that it is not necessary in line 2 to limit the scope of the writ of error because from line 11 to line 17 the purposes for which the writ may be taken are defined. But it was be cause there are many ways of attacking a decision or judgment quashing or setting aside an indictment that I have specified the questions which may be reviewed. An indictment may be quashed or set aside for other reasons than those included within the exception I have stated; and in order that there may be no question as to the grounds on which those objections may be raised, I have limited them to questions of law.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. With the permission of the Senator, I now have the amendment suggested by him. It has not been printed, but it has been furnished me from the desk. Page 2, line 2, after the word "taken," insert "on objections to the Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. The words "in matters of law."

words of limitation.

Mr. CULBERSON. What I wanted to inquire of the Senator is whether there are any objections to an indictment on matters of fact?

Mr. HEYBURN. There are grounds of objection on matters of mixed fact and law, because of the manner in which the law is stated or the facts are stated under the law. Indictments are quashed on those mixed grounds. I desire to confine it simply to the questions of law.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not remember ever to have known a demurrer to an indictment to raise any other question than a question of law.

Mr. HEYBURN. We are not discussing the question of a demurrer. We were discussing the question of a motion to quash an indictment, which, while it partakes of the nature of a demurrer, is something more than a demurrer.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, yes; that is true. It may go to the validity of the grand jury.

Mr. HEYBURN. It may go to all those questions-the manner of their summons, the manner of their impaneling.

Mr. SPOONER. The matter of their conduct.
Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. Those are mixed quest Yes. Those are mixed questions of law and fact. I would not have such a question reviewed on appeal of the Government of the United States, because it does not test the validity of a statute; it does not test the proper manner of indicting under a statute. I would limit the questions that may be raised by the Government of the United States to a narrow scope, because, as a rule, the question of the manner of impaneling a grand jury, the question of the manner in which a grand jury were summoned, are provided for by different statutes than those which provide for the punishment of the party who is to be tried before the court, and, therefore, are more matters of detail and form than they are matters of legal substance.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Texas?

Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. With the permission of the Senator, I will say that I have listened to his explanation of the amendment, but, rather than appear to acquiesce in his position, I desire to say that I do not yet perceive a case in which a motion to quash or set aside an indictment can raise a question of fact or a matter of fact. The motion to quash an indictment ordinarily is that it states no offense

Mr. HEYBURN. That is one of the grounds.

Mr. CULBERSON. Against the laws of the Government in favor of which the prosecution is aimed. But I can not con--there may be, but I can not conceive of it where the sufficiency of the indictment on a motion to quash can be said to raise a question of fact. It necessarily, as I understand, raises a question of law.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I can call the Senator's attention to circumstances under which it would be a mixed question of law and fact—that is, the court would have to determine Suppose, for instance, it was charged by affidavit-because that is the basis of a motion to quash, as a rule, where it is not something that appears on the face of the indictmentthat the officer who summoned the grand jury was not such an officer as is authorized by law to summon a grand jury. Suppose the matter of fact was shown by affidavit that members of the grand jury were not citizens of the United States. Those are questions of fact to be determined outside of the record as it appears upon the face of the indictment, and I desire to eliminate those questions, so that the United States will not be permitted to take an appeal from the decision of the court upon that class of questions.

Of course the defendant must be allowed to take advantage The defendant must not be disarmed to any extent whatever in defending himself against the charge of violation I hope that those instances, while there are other of the law. instances, may be sufficient to direct the mind of the Senator to the purpose that I have in limiting this in express terms to questions of law. It is a question of law as to whether or not a person other than a citizen may summon a grand jury. But is a question of fact as to whether or not the person who did summon the grand jury was a citizen. The question of the citizenship of the members of the grand jury is also a question Questions of law are necessarily involved in the determination of questions of fact. So I desire to eliminate all such considerations and let the United States have the right of appeal only when the motion to quash, for instance, is based upon the fact that the indictment upon its face is not in conformity with the law under which the indictment is framed. That question may be raised sometimes either by motion to quash or by demurrer. There are circumstances under which either of those proceedings may be selected, but it does not follow that in all cases both of them would be applicable.

Mr. President, if this measure is to be enacted into a statute in such manner as to widen or broaden the present rights of the Government in the prosecution of those charged with offenses so as to take away a single existing right of the defendant, then it should be defeated. If we can not so legislate as to the Government the right on its own motion to test the validity of statutes under which it seeks to punish offenders against the law without infringing the rights of the defendant, then the Government had better rest as it has rested for a hundred years.

This is one of the gravest questions that have come before the Congress of the United States at any time. The presumptions are all against it, because it has been for a hundred years thought quite sufficient for the preservation of the rights of the people and the rights of the individual that the law should remain as it is, and only legislation that will eliminate the conjectural question of jeopardy is safe legislation on this subject. Any legislation that leaves that question to be determined or to rest upon the uncertain and varying decisions of the courts is dangerous. Only by carefully guarded language in this bill against the possibility of the question of jeopardy entering into the interpretation and the application of it can we make this safe legislation, and not otherwise, because that question is involved in too much uncertainty. That is a mixed question of law and fact, too, sometimes. It is determined upon strictly legal grounds, but it involves a consideration of conditions and circumstances that ought not to enter into the construction of a law of this kind, which is a radical change and about-face proposition in the jurisprudence of this country.

No more important question arises than that of the rights of individual against the whole people, and when a person is arraigned to answer a criminal charge in the courts, then it is all the people against one, and no safeguard should be removed from that one. There is an element of danger in this bill to that one person who is on trial. We have no right to overlook any possible safeguard that that person now has.

Rather had we better add to than take away from.

The instances under which this question arises in the courts are not numerous. It has arisen only in a few instances where the Government has been dissatisfied by the determination of courts of law of the rights of the individual under the law. and the instances in which these questions have arisen and have been impressed upon the attention of the people are semi-The questions have arisen out of the political law rather than out of the criminal law, the violation of political statutes rather than statutes affecting the safety of property and the safety of homes and individuals. The interstate-commerce law, a penal statute, is a political statute. The employers' liability law, a penal statute, is a political one. I mean in its nature. The Government can afford to lose sometimes when it may perhaps think it should win, rather than to take the chances of depriving of his rights a defendant who, under these acts, is generally the agent of some other person, acting under instructions, under fixed rules, rules prescribing his conduct and defining his duties, which he obeys or observes at the risk of his employment.

Mr. President, with those amendments or others that accomplish the same purpose I could give my vote and support to the Without them I shall be compelled to vote against it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I do not intend to take up much of the time of the Senate in the discussion of the bill. Its merits have been ably presented both by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNox] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]. I think the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] was subject to some confusion of ideas as to the question of jeopardy. I think if we examine the decisions of our courts on that subject they lay down a rule that is certainly decisive

The Constitution provides that no man shall be put in jeopardy a second time for the same offense. If a man has been in jeopardy he can not be reindicted. If on first indictment the indictment is quashed, or the indictment is held bad on a demurrer or a motion in arrest of judgment, in all those cases, according to all the authorities, he can be reindicted. His case can be sent to another grand jury and he can be indicted again and tried. He could not thus be reindicted and retried if on the first trial he had been in jeopardy. I read from Wharton's Criminal Pleading and Practice, and it states the law correctly, for I have examined the authorities:

A conviction under a defective indictment is no bar, unless the conviction has been followed by judgment and execution of the sentence. Hence, after judgment has been arrested or reversed on a defective indictment, or after an indictment has been quashed, or a judgment for the defendant has been entered on demurrer, a new indictment may be found correcting the defects in the prior indictment, and to the second indictment the proceedings under the first are no bar.

Numerous authorities are cited in this connection, and if this is good law, and I think no one can question it, in none of these cases has the defendant been put in jeopardy under the constitutional provision, because if he had been in jeopardy under the first indictment he could not be reindicted and tried on the second indictment.

To the same effect is a text-book on the Law of Crimes and Criminal Procedure, by Mr. Hochheimer, of the Baltimore bar. He lays down the same doctrine-

That after indictment is quashed a new one may be preferred, and refusal to quash does not preclude demurrer or motion in arrest

Judgment for the defendant upon demurrer is that he be dismissed and discharged from the premises, leaving him liable to be reindicted. In section 338 the author cites several cases and says:

If judgment is arrested for insufficiency of the indictment, the proceedings are set aside, but the party may be reindicted; if it is arrested because the verdict is wrong, the verdict is set aside and a new trial ordered on the indictment.

The arrest of judgment in this case, on which an appeal lies, is not a general motion covering all the grounds on which a judgment may be arrested. It is simply for arrest of judgment because of the insufficiency of the indictment—that is, the failure of the indictment to charge a criminal offense.

I was a little surprised the other day to see the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Whyte] offer the amendments to the bill striking out the provisions in it relating to an appeal from a decision or judgment quashing an indictment, and from a decision or judgment sustaining a demurrer to an indictment, and from a decision arresting a judgment or conviction for insufficiency of indictment.

I find on looking in the decisions of the State of Maryland those cases in which demurrers have been allowed. I take the case of the State of Maryland v. William Sutton, found in Gill's Reports, volume 4, on page 494. I have already referred to it. There the defendant was indicted on an indictment containing two counts-one count charging him with rape, the other count The jury found charging him with an assault to commit rape. him guilty on the second count, and a motion was made in arrest of judgment and the motion sustained. The State of Maryland—not the defendant, but the State of Maryland—took a writ of error to the supreme court, and the supreme court of Maryland held that the motion in arrest of judgment should not have been granted, and directed the case to be sent back to the lower court for further proceedings; in other words, it directed the case to be sent back for a new trial or a new indictment, as the case might be.

I find another Maryland case which was a criminal case. It is the State of Maryland v. Patrick McNally, found in 55 Maryland Reports, on page 559. In this case the defendant was indicted in the court below for stealing some wheat. A motion to quash the indictment was granted and the State took a writ of error. After reciting the case, stating the indictment and stating what proceedings were had upon it and that a motion was made to quash it, the decision adds.

And thereupon the attorney for the State, desiring to have the record removed to this court as upon writ of error, filed a petition in the name of the State, designating the questions of law by the decision of which the State was aggrieved, namely, the quashing of the indictment.

The court, after discussing the case, finally concluded as fol-

Being of opinion that this is the correct doctrine-

That is, as to the validity of the indictment-and it appearing that the ruling of the circuit court in this case was clearly erroneous, its order and judgment quashing the indictment will be reversed and the cause will be remanded, to the end that the defendants may be required to plead to the indictment and the trial be proceeded with according to law.

I find another case in 48 Maryland, the case of Kearney v. The State of Maryland, 48 Maryland, page 16. There a demurrer was sustained to an indictment because it did not charge a criminal offense. The court in deciding that case concluded as follows:

The demurrer must therefore be sustained and the judgment reversed. But this reversal does not relieve the party from further liability. Not having been tried on a valid indictment, he has not been put in jeopardy, and may, on being discharged from his present imprisonment, be rearrested, reindicted, and tried again.

All these decisions and authorities that I have quoted go to show that the proper criterion in all these cases as to whether the defendant has been put in jeopardy or not is whether, if in any form before there has been a trial and a verdict the indictment is held defective and bad because it does not charge a criminal offense, the defendant can be reindicted, rearrested, and tried over again.

That could not be done under the Federal Constitution nor under the constitutions of the various States, which are alike on that subject, if the defendant had been in jeopardy. It is because the courts held that he was not in jeopardy on the first indictment that he could be rearrested and reindicted and tried over again. So we need not have any difficulty about the question whether a man has been put in jeopardy, because this amendment of the Senate committee to the House bill limits it exactly to all those cases, except in one instance, where the defendant can be reindicted, rearrested, and retried for the same offense.

As to the fourth ground contained in the bill, there we have provided, and expressly provided, that where the defendant has been in jeopardy he can not be tried over again.

From the decision or judgment sustaining a special plea in bar, when the defendant has not been put in jeopardy.

So in that matter, out of extreme caution and to put it exactly in harmony and in line with the provisions of the three preceding paragraphs, we have expressly provided that where the defendant has been put in jeopardy he can not be reindicted.

The Supreme Court of the United States has covered this ground pretty well in two or three important cases. Take the case of The United States v. Ball, a case where three defendants were indicted for murder committed in the Indian Terri-They were indicted and tried in the district of Texas, to which the Indian Territory was attached for judicial purposes. On the first trial one of the defendants was acquitted, and two of them were found guilty. The defendants who were found guilty moved an arrest of judgment on the ground, among others, that the indictment was too insufficient; that it did not properly charge a criminal offense. The case was taken up to the Supreme Court of the United States, and in 141 United States the court ordered the indictment, in its final decision, to be quashed and directed that the case be proceeded with further in the court below. The three defendants were afterwards They were again tried, all three of them, as well reindicted. the man who had been acquitted on the first and bad indictment as the two who had been found guilty.

When that case came to the Supreme Court of the United States, the Supreme Court held that the first indictment was bad and did not properly charge a criminal offense, and yet the one defendant who had been acquitted on that indictment could not be tried over again, he having been in jeopardy; but as to the other two defendants, they having moved an arrest of judgment and got the trial and proceedings reversed on their own motion, they were liable to be reindicted and retried, and they were properly convicted.

The same thing was held in one of the most recent cases that came to this court from the Philippine Islands, the case of Trono v. The United States. In that case the man had been convicted in the lower court. He took an appeal to the higher court. He was indicted for murder. He was convicted of an inferior offense, and he appealed to the supreme court of those islands, and the supreme court affirmed the conviction-that is, they found the defendant guilty, as he had been found in the court below, but they found him guilty of a higher offense. The court held there that, having taken an appeal to the supreme court of the Philippine Islands, it did not lie in his mouth to object to the proceedings, and under the procedure prevailing in the Philippine Islands where a case of that kind is appealed to a higher court upon the motion of the defendant the whole case is retried by the higher court.

In another case from the Philippine Islands where the government undertook to take an appeal-I refer to the Kepner case—the government undertook to take an appeal, and the supreme court held that in that case the government had no right of appeal.

All the cases provided for in this bill—and they are strictly covered, and nothing more is covered—relate to cases where under the decisions of our courts the defendant has not been put in jeopardy. I conceive that in all those cases it is proper that the Government should have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States to settle the important questions in-

To me it seems strange that a nisi prius judge in a distant part of the country shall take it upon himself to pronounce an enactment of Congress unconstitutional and void. There is no other country on the face of the earth that I know of where the courts of the country can veto legislation. In this country there is a double veto on our legislation. First, the President can veto a bill that we pass, and then after we have passed a law the courts can veto it. We can overcome the veto of the President, but under our system and our jurisprudence we can not overcome the veto of the courts.

Where it relates to an important subject that is of national concern, in which the welfare of all the people of the United States is involved, before an act of Congress should be pronounced unconstitutional we should have the opinion of the highest court of the land—the Supreme Court. In my opinion no other court ought to have the ultimate power to place a veto upon an act of Congress.

I have heard it said by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] and reiterated by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Hey-BURN] that this is a great innovation, that we have got along for one hundred years without any change in our criminal law. That is true; and we have got along a great many years without any changes or innovation in respect to many other important subjects. It is not until recent years that we found the necessity of passing the Sherman antitrust law. It was not until recent years that we found the necessity of passing a law to regulate interstate commerce and the transportation of interstate commerce. It is not until recent times that we found the necessity of passing a national pure-food law, providing for the inspection of the foods of the people. It is not until recently that we found the necessity of passing a national quarantine law. To all these laws the same objection might have been urged as has been urged by these Senators: "Oh, we have got along; we have sledded along all these years without this legislation; why should we have these innovations? Why not rest on the common law, which is big enough and broad enough for anything?

Mr. President, the question in its broadest sense appeals to me in this shape: We as the representatives of the people of the United States have found it necessary to enact this most important legislation to which I have called your attention, and the question now before us is whether we will allow a nisi prius judge of an inferior court to render ineffective our efforts in this behalf to protect the American people against trusts and monopolies and other dangerous things; whether we will allow ourselves to be handicapped and crippled by the decision of an inferior nisi prius judge.

To my mind the decision of Judge Humphrey in Chicago regarding the meat inspection law cuts no figure at all. I desire to call the attention of Senators to the fact that under the amendment that the Judiciary Committee have tendered to the Senate an appeal could not have been taken in that case. that case a jury was impaneled, and the question whether the defendants were entitled to immunity under the immunity law because they had furnished Mr. Garfield and the officials of his Bureau information was submitted to the jury, and the jury under instructions of the court found for the defendants. In that case the defendants under the Constitution had been in jeopardy and in that beef-trust case no appeal could lie.

A case may occur where a special plea in bar is interposed and the Government does not deny the fact pleaded in the special plea in bar, admits the truth of it, but says in its answer or demurrer to the plea in bar that it constitutes no bar. In that case, where a plea in bar is decided without the intervention of a jury, there has been no jeopardy; and if the decision on the plea in bar is against the defendant or in favor of the defendant, where the defendant has not been in jeopardy, he should have the right of appeal. We expressly provide in the fourth paragraph that in the case of a special plea in bar where the defendant has been put in jeopardy no appeal lies.

The Senator from Maryland referred to the matter of a bill of exceptions. A bill of exceptions is simply to preserve the record of the proceedings in the lower court. It is simply an official record of the proceedings taken in the court below, and they go up with the pleadings, with the indictment and the de-murrer to it, and the decision of the court. It shows what the court did in the premises. It simply puts it in a legal and technical form before the court. That is all there is in a bill of exceptions. I take it that in a case of a demurrer, where there is a broad demurrer and simply a decision of the court upon that demurrer, no bill of exceptions is necessary.

But this provides that in any of these cases where a bill of exceptions is necessary in order to bring an authenticated record before the court as to the proceedings that took place in the court below, the Government can have a bill of exceptions. It is necessary to include that in the bill, because under the authorities and decisions of the United States court the United States is not entitled to a bill of exceptions in criminal cases. Therefore that provision was put into this bill. It can do nobody any harm. It is simply to perfect the record, so that when the writ of error is brought for consideration in the appellate court it can have the whole record before it in an authenticated form.

I may be all wrong about it, but it seems to me that all Senators who have at heart the enforcement of the great body of remedial legislation that we have passed in recent years ought to be actuated by the desire to make that legislation effective and not to permit some inferior nisi prius court to put a veto on our efforts to protect the American people.

I have no pride about this matter. When this bill came over from the House it seemed to me that the provision of the bill was too bread, and that there was no meaning in taking an appeal where the verdict of the jury could not be set aside, where you could not disturb it. So when the bill was referred to a subcommittee I took pains to look up all the authorities on this question that I could find, and I aimed to put the bill in such a form that it would cover exactly those cases in which the defendant had not been put in jeopardy under the Constitution of the United States. I believe that the bill is limited strictly to that matter. As to the rest, while I have no doubt about the constitutional authority of every provision of the bill, it is simply a question of policy, a question whether we will allow inferior courts in many instances to render this great body of remedial legislation that we have been compelled to pass in recent years to be noneffective and allow these inferior courts to veto a legislative act.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, it seems to be almost a travesty for anyone to discuss so important and serious a question as this to empty benches. Nevertheless, as I stated the other day, when the bill was about passing without opposition, it is too important a matter to pass without consideration; that it is a startling innovation upon the Federal practice in criminal cases for the last hundred years.

I was not in error when I looked upon it in that light, for those Senators who are familiar by practice in the Federal courts with the views of the highest of those tribunals will know that not long since the question came up in the Supreme Court, and it was argued that under the Evarts Act, the act creating the circuit court of appeals between the lower courts and the Supreme Court of the United States, the court of appeals decided against it, and it was an innovation so serious that the language of the legislature should be so expressed that he who runs may read and understand.

In the case of the United States v. Sanges, in 144 United States Reports, 310, the Supreme Court, remarking upon that clause in the law giving a right of a writ of error in the case of conviction of a capital crime, said that the Supreme Court can not review by writ of error a judgment of acquital, except, possibly, when a constitutional, jurisdictional, or treaty question is involved. Under the statute they have a right under the writ of error to consider such a case; but except in these extreme cases, where a high question of constitutional law or that which goes to the jurisdiction of the court or in regard to a treaty, the Supreme Court of the United States could not review a case where there had been a judgment of acquittal.

Again, in answer to this attempt on the part of the counsel to get the court to interfere under that act of 1891, the Supreme Court said:

It is impossible to presume the intention on the part of Congress to make so serious and far-reaching an innovation in the criminal jurisprudence of the United States.

That can be found on page 323 of 144 United States Reports. Under that law of 1891 it can be seen that by section 5 appeals or writs of error may be taken from the district court, or from the existing circuit court of the United States, direct to the Supreme Court in the following cases:

In any case in which the jurisdiction of the court is in issue. In such cases the question of jurisdiction alone shall be certified to the Supreme Court from the court below for decision.

From the final sentences and decrees in prize causes.

In cases of conviction of a capital or otherwise infamous crime.

In any case that involves the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States, etc.

When the case of De Lemos v. The United States came up before the circuit court of appeals—and it is reported in 46 Circuit Court of Appeals Cases, 196—the court there laid down the distinction which seems to me to be lost sight of in the bill now under consideration. The court there said:

The writ of error and the appeal are the two principal methods known to English jurisprudence and to the jurisprudence of the Federal courts by which cases may be removed from an inferior court to an appellate court for review.

In the bill now under consideration, which it is proposed to enact into law, the terms "writ of error" and "appeal" seem to be used as though they were synonymous instead of being entirely different. Bills of exception are spoken of as if they did not have reference to appeals when they are made applicable, under the bill, to writs of error, and consequently in the confusion which is to be found in this proposed law is the great danger I apprehend in ever having it administered by a court of valid jurisdiction.

The appeal, says the court, brings up the whole case on its merits on the ruling of the court in regard to the admission of testimony or the rejection of testimony, and the various other questions that may arise during the pendency of the trial. That is the appeal, that is the bill of exceptions by which the appeal is taken—entirely different from any proceeding by writ by which a jurisdictional question or a constitutional question can be decided. It was for that reason that I suggested the other day that in these cases the writ of error was to be issued and its service was to be applied solely to jurisdictional or constitutional questions; but you will see, Mr. President, upon examining this bill, that you can not tell where the limitation comes in with regard to the right of the United States to persecute, instead of prosecute, the party charged with crime. In the first part of the bill you will see that it speaks of the writ of error which is to be issued:

That a writ of error may be taken by and on behalf of the United States from the district or circuit courts to the Supreme Court or the circuit courts of appeals, as prescribed in an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, and the acts amendatory thereof, in all criminal cases.

But farther on it provides:

In all these instances

For instance, after a motion in arrest of judgment on conviction for insufficiency of indictment-

In all these instances the United States shall be entitled to a bill of exceptions as in civil cases.

What do they want with a bill of exceptions when they have a writ of error carrying the jurisdictional or constitutional question from the lower to the higher court? If I had not too great respect for the Judiciary Committee, I would say it was a legal trap. Then what does the appeal do? Says the United States circuit court of appeals:

The appeal brings up the whole case for reexamination on the merits to both law and facts, and for decision as if no decree had been ever entered.

But this bill says "As in civil cases." The court further

A writ of error was the only appropriate remedy at common law by which a case could be brought up for review by a superior court having jurisdiction.

In the case of Cohens v. Virginia (6 Wheat., 409) the writ of error is described and shown to be confined entirely to rulings on points of law, and the distinction is fundamental, and yet under this bill a bill of exceptions and an appeal are made precisely similar to a writ of error, in conflict with the under-standing of all the practice in the Federal court from the time that court was established under the Constitution of the United States.

I do not want to take up too much time of the Senate by going into details, but I will say, in passing, that it was for that reason I proposed the other day to limit the writ of error in its operation to matters of law coming up before the jury impaneled to try the party. Then you have got no question of jeopardy. There is no difficulty in raising a jurisdictional or a constitutional question by a demurrer to the indictment, and I suggested the form and substance of a simple amendment to the latter part of this bill, where the objections to be taken are described, and they are limited to four, and compel the man under trial to make his constitutional objection on a demurrer at the time he is called to the bar to plead. He is in jeopardy after he has pleaded, after issue has been joined on the part of the Government, after the jury is sworn, and all the preliminaries are completed for trial. It is not that he is put in jeopardy by conviction or by acquittal under peculiar circumstances in the case of certain penalties. He is put in jeopardy when he is required to be put to a second trial. That is the time when he is in jeopardy, and the Supreme Court has said so. The Constitution—which is nothing in reality in the part to which I have referred but the embodiment of the common lawthe Constitution in that humanity which, thank God, exists among us all, that humanity to protect the unfortunate when they are accused of crime by the presumption of innocence, which begins from the very moment the charge is made against him at law until the last moment when the trial is brought to an end—that same humanity provided that he should not be put to trial a second time, and thus his life or limb be put in jeopardy. Our fathers, when they inserted this amendment in the Constitution, embodied only that principle which we have inherited from those upon the other side of the great ocean. These are the words:

No fact tried by jury shall be otherwise examined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law.

Then follows the protection which is given to the individual, that he shall not be put in jeopardy of life or limb. Then the act of 1897, following the act creating the circuit court of appeals, came up for judgment in the case of Bucklin v. The United States (159 U. S., 680), in which the court said this:

The final judgment of a court of the United States of the conviction of a capital offense or other infamous crime is not reviewable here except on writ of error. Our review of the judgment when brought here in that form is confined to questions of law properly by a bill of exceptions as arising upon the record.

Not a bill of exceptions, as in criminal cases, but a bill of exceptions as arising on the record, and then only the question which is shown to have occurred in the trial upon the face of the record, and not upon the facts.

Again, in the same case, the court said:

Under the act as amended (January 20, 1897) it is not denied that capital cases can only be reviewed by the Supreme Court on writ of error. It is conceded and is clear that other criminal cases, not infamous, can be reviewed only by writ of error in the circuit court of appeals.

Here is a bill opening the door wide to try a man over again through a bill of exceptions arising upon the merits and the facts of the case.

A proper construction of the act does not allow an oppeal to this court

There is the distinction the circuit court of appeals makes between a writ of error taking up a purely legal question and an appeal which opens wide the door to an examination of the case entirely, as it would be tried in the upper court de novo-

A proper construction of the act does not allow an appeal to this court from a judgment of a circuit court convicting a defendant of an infamous crime.

Now, on the question of jeopardy I shall detain the Senate but a few moments. The language of the fifth amendment of the Constitution relating to jeopardy is:

Nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb.

In Commonwealth v. Fitzpatrick, which I find in 1 Law Reports Annotated, 451, the jury had been dismissed in disregard of the protest of the defendants, and when they were again put on trial the court said they had the right under the Constitution to say: "We have been once put in jeopardy for the crime, and we can not be compelled to undergo the same peril a second time for the same offense." This was the effect of their special plea, and it was unanswerable.

The case I cited-and I am sorry that my friend the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] is not hereis from 15 Pennsylvania, page 466, Pieffer v. Commonwealth.

Again, withdrawing a criminal prosecution from a jury which had been charged with the trial of a prisoner, and dismissing the jury merely because a witness was absent, operates as an acquittal, and the prisoner can not again be placed on trial, under the constitutional provision that no person shall be for the same offense subject to be twice put in jeopardy of his life or liberty. That was decided by the South Carolina supreme court in the case of South Carolina v. Richardson (47 S. C. Rept.,

It is only the common-law maxim embodied in the Constitution, as I stated, founded in the humanity of the law and in a jealous watchfulness over the rights of the citizens when brought in unequal contest with the State.

That I quote from the opinion in the case of State v. Jones (7 Geo., 422), cited by my colleague from Maryland [Mr. Ray-NER] this morning. The same principle is found in the case of United States v. Sanges (144 U. S.).

Again:

At common law the protection from second jeopardy for the same offense clearly included immunity from second prosecution when the court having jurisdiction had acquitted the defendant of the offense; and it is the settled law of this court—

Says the Supreme Court of the United States, from which I and it is the settled law of this court that former jeopardy includes one who has been acquitted by a verdict duly rendered, although no judgment be entered on the verdict, and it was found upon a de-fective indictment.

That is the case of Kepner v. United States (195 U. S.)

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] has cited my My own State has had the right of writ of error on jurisdictional questions ever since it was a State. not stand upon the statutes. But it had no greater right. It never had any right of appeal until the act of 1872. In the case referred to by the Senator from Minnesota and in the other cases afterwards referred to by him the right to claim by special plea in bar former jeopardy was waived by the defendants where they were convicted and where they themselves appealed. And so it is the same law in Maryland.

I am not, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] will remember, interposing any objection to an appeal and to a writ of error issued in a case where prior to the impaneling of the jury, on a demurrer raising jurisdictional or constitutional questions, the United States shall have the right of appeal, but it is against the bill which is about to be enacted that I enter a protest.

I do so not as a child at the bar. I practiced in my first career as a lawyer as the assistant of the attorney-general of my State in prosecuting in Maryland; afterwards, on the other side of the table, defending persons charged with crime, and subsequently as attorney-general of my State. I was the governor who signed the Maryland law in 1872 in regard to giving the State the right of appeal in certain cases. So that I say to the Senator from Minnesota that every case he cited tends to prove our theory that the moment a man has pleaded to the indictment and not demurred; the moment he has raised an issue with the State and the State accepts the issue and the jury is impaneled he is in jeopardy from that time until the verdict of acquittal by the jury is rendered.

Mr. President, while I am most earnestly opposed to the bill, I am ready to yield that far. It would have made the case that happened out in the West-the case decided by Judge Humphrey—impossible. An appeal would have been taken at that time originally, and the question of immunity could not have been raised afterwards if the clause that is in this bill had been in the law then, that objections of a constitutional or jurisdictional character must be made before the jury is sworn. There would have been no trouble, for the defendants would have been compelled to have raised the question upon demurrer.

Mr. President, I felt it my duty to make my protest to add to what my vote will indicate when this bill comes up for final action.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, only a few words on this bill. It is absolutely unnecessary, after the remarks which have been submitted in favor of it by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson], and other Senators who favor it, to go in any detail into the discussion of it.

I have listened with great interest to the argument of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Whyte] who has just taken his seat. It was the argument of a lawyer of great ability and very large and long experience. He is not opposed to the presentation by writ of error by the Government to the Supreme Court in criminal cases within defined limits of questions of law. He is much more discriminating, I think, in his opposi-tion to this bill than my distinguished friend, his colleague [Mr. RAYNER], impressed me as being.

Mr. President, I have never been much alarmed or had any sympathy whatever with the criticism which is made of our judicial system so far as it involves the decision by nisi prius judges of constitutional questions. Some of the ablest judges who have ever sat upon the Supreme Bench won their reputation as jurists in the district and circuit courts of the United One or two of those now upon the Supreme Bench achieved great fame sitting at the circuit as circuit judges. I have known, and so has every Senator here known, some very able lawyers upon the district bench of the United States. They take the same oath of office that the Supreme Court judges do and that the judges of the circuit courts do, and if a district judge of the United States in a case properly before him involving a constitutional question has a conviction that the law before him is unconstitutional, he would be a coward and unfit to sit upon the bench if he did not so declare.

Mr. President, I did not discover, if I may be permitted to say so, weight in the opposition made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] who first spoke to this bill, upon the ground of the conflicting decisions of the various courts in the United States as to jeopardy and what constitutes it. The courts in the various States have differed about it, but the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States as to what constitutes "jeopardy" within the meaning of the Constitution will be binding upon every district and circuit judge in the United States, without any regard whatever to differences of the State courts upon the subject of the legal meaning of the word jeopardy."

The Senator from Maryland spoke of the pending bill as a step toward centralization and the enlargement of Federal power. I am too obtuse, Mr. President, to be able to discover anything whatever in the proposition before the Senate involving enlargement of Federal power, using the phrase in its proper sense, or tending to centralization in the Government. ply deals with the practice in the courts of the United States. It is not intended to affect the substantial right of any defendant who has been indicted in any of the courts of the United States. It does not enlarge Federal power. It really regulates the practice and the procedure. No defendant has any vested right, nor has any citizen, in mere matters of procedure, nor has any defendant a right per se to object to an appeal by the Government in certain cases. To my apprehension there is no constitutional question involved in this measure. It is not possible for the Congress, by any valid act, to subject a person for the same offense to be twice in jeopardy of life or limb. That is impossible.

It is in the Constitution. It is fundamental. No person in the United States I suppose would for a moment, if he could, depart from it, so elemental is its justice, and the Congress can not, if it would; and if the court should feel obliged to construe anything in this bill as violating that provision of the Constitution, which I think it could not possibly do, it would be clearly a void act, and the court would give it a construction which would render it valid, not one which would render it void. Jeopardy is not involved in it at all, as the Committee on the Judiciary thought and as I think has been very clearly shown here to-day by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] and others, by argument which I do not intend to repeat.

It is an "innovation." Everything that changes an existing system or practice is an innovation. The circuit court of appeals legislation was an innovation. The prosecution by information for a large class of offenses in the Federal courts was an innovation. It does not follow, as it seems to be thought by some Senators here, that because for a hundred years there has been no change in the matters covered by this bill there is no There have been changes in nearly all of the need for it. States in regard to the criminal practice. The people of a large number of States became satisfied, some of them a long time ago, others at later dates, that the old system which denied the State the right of appeal in criminal cases, within certain limits, was absolutely unjust to the people. The old law, it has been thought, gave too many technical advantages and grounds for indefinite delay to the defendant in criminal cases.

In many of the States the criminal laws have been changed so as to simplify them, not depriving the defendant of any substantial right at all, but facilitating and hastening the disposition of criminal causes. In my State they have provided for trial by information. They have made informations amendable. In many States, and notably in some of the Southern States, as shown by the report made with great industry by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], public opinion demanded a change in the ancient rules so that there may be an appeal in certain cases and upon certain questions, and it is interesting to note that in nearly all those cases appeals have been given as they are proposed to be given in this bill.

It is not the function of the Government to confine its interest solely to the defendant in criminal cases. The rights of the defendant must be religiously safeguarded. Of course that goes without saying. But, subject to that, the legislature has a right—and not only a right, but it is its duty—to look to the interests of the great body of the people. That is what has been done in the States. That is what within narrow limits is proposed to be done by this bill, and would be done, I think, if the word "appeal" and these lines about a bill of exceptions were stricken out.

Take Alabama. In Alabama they provide that-

In all criminal cases where the act of the legislature under which the indictment or information is preferred is held to be unconstitutional the solicitor may take an appeal in behalf of the State to the supreme court, which appeal shall be certified as other appeals in criminal cases.

In Arkansas they have a provision very carefully guarded:

If the attorney-general on inspecting the record is satisfied that error has been committed to the prejudice of the State, and upon which it is important to the correct and uniform administration of the criminal law that the supreme court shall decide, he may, by lodging the transcript in the clerk's office of the supreme court within sixty days after the decision, take the appeal; but a judgment in favor of the defendant which operates as a bar to a future prosecution of the offense shall not be reversed by the supreme court.

Of course not, but that language which operates as a bar to a future prosecution of the offense is significant language. do not know how it has been construed by the supreme court of Arkansas, if it has been construed at all, but it is well used.

If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, I understand it applies where the party has been in jeopardy en a valid indictment.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly. Mr. BERRY. The Supreme Court says that jeopardy attaches when the jury is sworn.
Mr. SPOONER. Yes.
Mr. BERRY. I think that is it.

Mr. SPOONER. That is right, I will not read all of this report. When Senators talk about public opinion and about everything being well enough as it has been for a hundred years, simply call attention to the fact that the people of many of the States have found it a necessary reform in criminal procedure to incorporate in their statutes provisions almost identical with those that are proposed here as to the United States in certain cases.

CALIFORNIA.

An appeal may be taken by the people: (1) From an order setting aside the indictment or information; (2) from a judgment for the defendant on a demurrer to the indictment, accusation, or information; (3) from an order granting a new trial; (4) from an order arresting judgment, and (5) from an order made after judgment, affecting the substantial rights of the people.

The statute of the State of California goes much further than is proposed by this bill, and further than I, for one, should be satisfied to go.

Connecticut has broad provisions on the same subject. has a provision very much like the provision in this bill:

An appeal may be taken by the State: (1) From a judgment for the defendant on a demurrer to the indictment or information; (2) from an order granting a new trial; (3) from an order arresting judgment, and (4) from any order made after judgment affecting the substantial rights of the prosecution.

The Indiana provision is very much like this bill.

Appeals to the supreme court may be taken by the State in the following chees, and no other: (1) Upon a judgment for the defendant on quashing or setting aside an indictment or information; (2) upon an order of the court arresting the judgment; (3) upon a question reserved by the State.

That is their reform of the criminal procedure in respect to the matters which we are here considering. In Iowa-

Either the defendant or the State may take an appeal. But in appeals by the State the supreme court can not reverse the judgment or modify it so as to increase the punishment.

A limitation which would be entirely unsatisfactory in its scope to me.

Kansas has the same as Idaho. Kentucky has a provision for appeal by the State in criminal cases. Mississippi has one which is very well drawn and quite as broad as that proposed here. Missouri has one-

An appeal is allowed to the State in any criminal prosecution when a indictment has been held insufficient on motion to quash, demurrer, or motion in arrest.

And so Montana has one like the one proposed here, and Nebraska and Nevada. New York, a very progressive State—Mr. RAYNER. Will the Senator allow me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly. Mr. RAYNER. If you will take the Nebraska or the Nevada law, I would be perfectly satisfied with it. Just look at the Nebraska and the Nevada laws. Both have the provision I have asked for in this amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I will get to the provision the Senator asks for, which I do not think ought to be in the bill.

Yes, but I want to call the attention of the Mr. RAYNER. Senator, when he is citing Nebraska and Nevada as having laws of this sort, to the fact that Nebraska and Nevada have qualified them with provisions substantially similar to the amendment I have offered.

Mr. SPOONER. With respect to future operation. That is true. They provide, in Nevada, that it shall not operate to affect a judgment in favor of the defendant.

Mr. RAYNER. Look at Nebraska.

Mr. SPOONER. It is too long. I will not take time to read it. In New York the provision is:

An appeal to the supreme court may be taken by the people in the following cases and no other: (1) Upon a judgment for the defendant, on a demurrer to the indictment, and (2) upon an order of the court arresting the judgment.

The last is the only item in the bill which has given me any trouble. They have it in several of the States. I might take the time further. They have it in North Dakota. North Carolina has a provision including arrest of judgment and everything else, as I now recall it, in this bill. Oregon has one which extends also to motions granted arresting the judgment. In Tennessee either party may appeal. South Carolina pro-

The State may appeal from a judgment granting a motion to quash an indictment.

In Utah an appeal may be taken by the State. In Wisconsin we do not allow appeals in criminal cases

Mr. President, that is a pretty fair indication as to what the people of many of the States have in the tide of time found to be necessary by way of reforming the criminal procedure. course it needs no argument to show that what is due to the great body of people, represented by the Government in these cases in the States is due to the great body of the people of the United States represented by the Government in its prosecutions.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], as I understand it, is an absolute change in the law. It changes the rule as to jeopardy. The Senator said after a man had been once tried he did not want him tried again, jeopardy or no jeopardy. That is going very much further than the States have gone and very much further, so far as I remember, than anyone here has proposed to go.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case to which the Senator from Minnesota called attention, made a very interesting decision on the question of jeopardy. They overruled the esting decision on the question of jeopardy. English rule as laid down in the books which we who have practiced the criminal law have been accustomed to take as standard. The court in its unanimous opinion says:

In England an acquittal upon an indictment so defective that if it had been objected to at the trial or by motion in arrest of judgment or by writ of error it would not have supported any conviction or sentence has generally been considered as insufficient to support a plea of former acquittal. (2 Hale, P. C., 248, 394; 2 Hawk., P. C., c. 35, sec. 8; 1 Stark. Crim. Pl. (2d ed), 320; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 458; Archb. Crim. Fl. & Ev. (19th ed.), 143; 1 Russell on Crimes (6th ed.), 48.) And the general tendency of opinion in this country has been to the same effect. (3 Greenl. Ev., sec. 35; 1 Bishop's Crim. Law, sec. 1021, and cases there cited.)

The court deals with that rule and is not satisfied that it was well sustained by the English authorities. I will not take the time to go into it. But they cite as the leading American case on the subject, which they adopt, the case of The People v. Barrett (1 Johns, N. Y.). They also cite with approval the case of The Commonwealth v. Purchase (2 Pick.), in which Chief Justice Parker delivered the opinion of the court. I will not take time to read it. They cite the Massachusetts statute—
Mr. RAYNER. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. RAYNER. Why does he object to this amendment? If it is surplusage, it certainly is not objectionable. If the substance of the amendment is already in the bill, that is no objection to it. Why object to it when, with respect to the District of Columbia, Congress has passed a law identical, word for word, with the language of this amendment:

Provided, That if on such appeal it shall be found that there was error in the rulings of the court during the trial, a verdict in favor of the defendant shall not be set aside.

If it is good in the District of Columbia, why is it not good all over the United States? What is the objection to it?

Mr. SPOONER. Has it ever been passed upon by the Su-

Mr. RAYNER. I am satisfied the Senator from Wisconsin would not claim that this amendment is unconstitutional.

Mr. SPOONER. Which amendment?
Mr. RAYNER. The one I have offered and the one I have just read.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the one the Senator has just read, unless the Supreme Court has passed upon it, about which I do not know, would very likely be held by the Supreme Court to be calling upon them to exercise no judicial function. words, as presenting to the court and inviting decision by the court upon a purely moot question; and I am inclined to think that under the doctrine laid down by the Supreme Court in the case of Gordon, in which the opinion was by Taney, C. J., who died before it was announced, and which the court adopted (I do not remember the volume), and in the decision made by the court affirming Ex parte Sanborn afterwards, and numerous other cases, the Supreme Court of the United States would say that it is a purely moot question.

Mr. RAYNER. Will the Senator allow me?
Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. RAYNER, Suppose they did say that? No one would be hurt by it. Then they would determine whether or not the prisoner had been in jeopardy. This measure, I understand, was considered by some of the ablest lawyers in both the Senate and the House, and if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, it does not, as I am trying to show, undertake to define what jeopardy is.

Mr. SPOONER. No; and that is one—
Mr. RAYNER. Just a moment.
Mr. SPOONER. Let me have the amendment.
Mr. RAYNER. It does not undertake to define what jeopardy is or is not, because, as I tried to show, there are a number of cases that might not be legal jeopardy. The amendment does not involve the plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit.

Mr. SPOONER. No.
Mr. RAYNER. It simply says that if a man has been indicted once and tried, he shall not be tried again. It is entirely outside the question of jeopardy. If the Supreme Court pro nounces it unconstitutional, then it certainly does not hurt anybody; and if it is all right, it may be necessary; and if it is mere surplusage, it can not hurt anybody.

I have not heard from the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] or the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] or the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] in all this argument a single objection to the amendment that I have offered.

Mr. SPOONER. I have this objection to the amendment which the Senator has offered: If it means anything it means too much.

Mr. RAYNER. That is an objection— Mr. SPOONER. If it does not mean anything, it is not very dignified or wise legislation to incorporate in an important act of Congress.

Mr. RAYNER. I will modify it in any way the Senator can suggest to give it additional dignity.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not speaking of its apparel. I am speaking of the substance. It is the body that ought not to be projected here. It is not the clothing. There is nothing that can interfere with jeopardy-

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether the chief purpose of this proposed act is not so much to secure the conviction of a defendant as to secure uniformity of construction as to the validity of statutes of Congress. Assuming that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland does present simply a moot question, I will ask him whether he can not suggest some method by which the decision of the Supreme Court can be obtained upon these questions without tying up the defendant and subjecting him to all the law's delays resulting from tedious appeals?

Mr. SPOONER. I think there was great merit in the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. New-Lands], which was voted down by substituting for it the Peter

Mr. NEWLANDS. But that simply released the defendant on his own recognizance.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes. Mr. NEWLANDS. And pending the appeal he would be under constant anxiety with reference to the result of a case which might take months and possibly years to determine. It seems to me the humanity of the law requires that the de-fendant should not only not be put in jeopardy twice, but that he should have a speedy trial. He should not be kept hanging by the eyelids while these legal questions are being determined.

Mr. SPOONER. He can not be put in jeopardy twice. Such "anxiety" can not well be avoided in all cases. against public justice has no right to be protected against this

Mr. NEWLANDS. He can not be.
Mr. SPOONER. No.
Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand that; but I understand the purpose of the law also is to give, and that the humanity of the law demands that there shall be given, a speedy determination and out of that humanity thus far appeals have not been given in criminal cases as against the defendant. Nor did appeals exist at the common law, as I understand.

Now we propose to change all that, and the change necessarily keeps the defendant hanging by the eyelids for months and possibly years awaiting the determination of the court. It seems to me that if the purpose is simply to obtain uniform construction by the courts as to the constitutionality or validity of the acts we ought to find some means of doing it without tying up the defendant for an interminable time.

Mr. SPOONER. The method here proposed is the one adopted in a good many of the States.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am not informed as to that. The Senator from Maryland referred to a number of States where the decision on appeal did not affect the defendant, where a judgment or a verdict releasing the defendant was not set aside upon a decision by the appellate tribunal unfavorable to him upon points of law

Mr. RAYNER. There are twenty-three States which have declined to adopt it, and of those that have adopted it, half a dozen have put in the reservation, among them the State of the Senator from Nevada. So the large majority of the States either have not adopted this legislation, or they have put an amendment in it making it perfectly harmless, the way I have proposed to do here. I have not yet heard the slightest argument whatever on this floor against it-not a word.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to have the Senator from Maryland point out to me what there is in this bill that can involve double jeopardy.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not know whether or not the Senator heard me when I discussed this question for about an hour.

Mr. SPOONER. I heard the Senator, but—
Mr. RAYNER. I am sorry. I did my best to make myself

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator always does well.
Mr. RAYNER. I know. The Senator himself does well sometimes, too. I do not think he is doing quite as well on this matter as I have heard him do before.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think the Senator ever thinks I do well when I disagree with him.

Mr. RAYNER. I think the Senator is doing as well as any-one else could. I think he is handling a bad case in the best possible way.

I admitted that there was no jeopardy in the cases I referred to. I have no right to define jeopardy. What right have we here to define jeopardy? We all have to agree upon the proposition that Congress can not define jeopardy. The Supreme Court must define it.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.
Mr. RAYNER. I gave three instances, and there was no answer on the floor, although I asked for an answer, where a man was not in legal jeopardy but where he had been tried. A man may be tried without being put in legal jeopardy.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. RAYNER. And I wanted the amendment to cover those There is no use of my repeating the cases. One of them was where the court mere motu had decided the law to be unconstitutional. Second, where the court had held that the law under which the prisoner was being tried had been repealed. Third, on a demurrer or a motion ne recipiatur to a plea of limitations, unless you put this amendment in the defendant can be tried again.

Mr. SPOONER. He can not if he has been in jeopardy.
Mr. RAYNER. The Supreme Court will say he has not been in legal jeopardy. I do not want that man tried again whether he has been in legal jeopardy or not.

Mr. SPOONER. I am glad the Senator puts it that way. Mr. RAYNER. I put it that way before.

Mr. SPOONER. I was so unhappy as not to understand the Senator fully, although I think he did put it that way before. There are a vast number of cases in which if a man has been once tried and the court finds that he was not, for some reason, in legal jeopardy and that therefore under the Constitution of the United States he may be lawfully tried again, justice to the people, justice to decency, justice to the Government require that he shall be tried again.

Mr. RAYNER rose.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator will permit me.
Mr. RAYNER. Oh, yes; I will not interrupt you.
Mr. SPOONER. Permit me. Take a case of piracy. Take a case of treason. Take the infamous case of rape. Take some cases of murder, cowardly, merciless, brutal as the human mind can conceive of, and on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States the case is reversed, under a decision by the court that the defendant has not been in legal jeopardy. Why should he not be tried again?

Mr. RAYNER. I will answer that question.

Mr. President, that would be a complete answer to every objection that has been made to this proposed law, if the Senator did not forget to state that this amendment requires that there shall be a verdict for the defendant. This amendment says that in every case where there has been a verdict and a judg-ment for the defendant he shall not be tried again.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President-

Mr. RAYNER. One moment. I do not say that wherever a defendant is tried he shall not be tried again, for every one of us knows that where there is a motion in arrest of judgment he is always tried again, either on the same indictment or on another indictment. But I say where the defendant is acquitted, where there is a verdict of not guilty, where there is judgment on it, that he shall go without day and be discharged, I do not care how great the crime, because the greatness of the crime never changes the principle, I say that man ought not to be tried again.

Mr. SPOONER. There is nothing in this bill that reaches a verdict of not guilty. There is nothing that touches that subject in any way on earth except one provision, and that is the motion made by the defendant himself where he has been found guilty, of course, to arrest the judgment.

Mr. RAYNER. Let us see if the Senator is correct. Let us see if he is not mistaken about that. Will the Senator let me have that report? Let me ask the Senator, because we want enlightenment on this subject. I have no feeling about it— Mr. SPOONER. Nor I.

Mr. RAYNER. Not the slightest. It is a question of law. Mr. SPOONER. Nobody can have any feeling about it. Mr. RAYNER. I am perfectly willing to vote for a law that will give the Supreme Court of the United States the right to decide these questions, if you do not apply it to pending cases. I am perfectly willing to vote for a bill to give the Supreme the right to determine the constitutionality or the unconstitutionality of a law and to decide any point whatever of I am perfectly willing to do that, when you save law or practice. a man who has been tried from being tried again.

Now suppose the case I gave you this morning. At the end of the case, after the testimony is in, the court quashes the indictment upon the ground of its unconstitutionality. The court does it itself.

That does not apply. Mr. PATTERSON.

Mr. RAYNER. I beg your pardon. It does apply. I will show the Senator from Colorado that it applies to it, unless I misconceive the language of it. "From the decision or judgment quashing or setting aside an indictment." That does not say that the prisoner must file that motion. There is not a word in it about the defendant filing a motion. Can not the court render a decision or judgment or set aside the indictment of its own motion? It has done so over and over again in our State. I should like the Senator's opinion upon that point.

Mr. SPOONER. Is that jeopardy?

Mr. RAYNER. I say that is not jeopardy, and that the man ought never to be tried again. That is just the division between us. The man ought never to be tried after giving his testimony in that case.

Mr. SPOONER. As far as I am concerned I am not willing to lay down any rule of that kind in this country—

Mr. RAYNER. Then that is all right.
Mr. SPOONER. That no matter what the offense may be, no matter how vitally the public interest is involved in the administration of justice, in such a case where the Supreme Court finds that there has been no jeopardy we shall declare by law that the defendant shall not be again tried.

Mr. RAYNER. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit another interruption, does he think the judgment should be reversed after the man has been arraigned, after he has plead to the indictment, after he has employed counsel and the testimony for the prosecution has gone in and his own testimony has gone in, so that the prosecution knows exactly what his case is? He is perfectly willing to go before the jury and take the chances of conviction or acquittal. It is not his fault. court steps in and holds the law unconstitutional. The Senator thinks that a man ought to be tried over and over again, if the Supreme Court should reverse the judgment of the court below?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; he may be tried over again.

Mr. RAYNER. Of course. Does the Senator think he ought to be tried over?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; in many cases.

Mr. RAYNER. I say never, never. Not as long as there is any spirit of liberty in the land will I ever vote for anything The prosecution knows every word of that man's

Mr. SPOONER. I see no good reason and the framers of the Constitution saw no good reason for it; there was not incor-porated in the Constitution such a provision as the Senator contends for. What was placed in the Constitution was that of life or limb. That is the constitutional rule. That is the rule under which we have administered the Government ever since it was ordained. The Senator from Maryland is not content with that rule, but he insists that independent of it, in all cases where a man has been tried even on his own motion and judgment or verdict of guilty has been arrested-

Mr. RAYNER. No; not arrested. Mr. SPOONER. Yes; arrested. Mr. RAYNER. Not arrested.

Mr. SPOONER. All this bill does

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield further to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes. Mr. RAYNER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I am not refer-Mr. RAYNER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I am not referring to arrest of judgment. When the judgment is arrested a man is always tried over. He can be tried under the old indictment or a new indictment. I am asking the Senator for infor-I say that the man ought not to be tried again. Senator from Wisconsin says that the man ought to be tried again. If he ought to be tried again, then the amendment ought to be defeated, and if he ought not to be tried again, the amendment ought to be adopted.

Let me ask the Senator this question: That man practically outside of this proposed law can not be tried again. You can not try a man over again for the simple reason that he would go before the same judge, in the same jurisdiction, and the judge has already decided the law to be unconstitutional. Practically it is impossible now to try that man over again, but by passing this law you give the court the right to try him over

Mr. SPOONER. If the court below had held the law unconstitutional and the Supreme Court had held the law constitutional. I suppose the nisi prius judge would probably by the time the case got back there have changed his mind.

Mr. RAYNER. But the Senator forgets that the Supreme Court has no power under existing law to pronounce the law constitutional, because you have no right of appeal. This law steps in for the first time and gives a right of appeal. If I can only impress that upon the mind of the Senator it may be that he will change his view.

Mr. SPOONER. That is perfectly understood, and that is one of the objects of this proposed law.

Mr. RAYNER. It opens the case against him. Mr. SPOONER. The question is whether it subjects a man under any aspect of it to the danger of double jeopardy. Mr. RAYNER. Does it not do it in that case practically

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator says he does not care whether it is double jeopardy or not. Even if a man under the Constitution may properly and lawfully be put on trial again, if he has been tried once, even though it were a mistrial, if he had been for a moment in jeopardy, he insists that we shall provide by law, no matter what the case may be, that he shall not be tried again; that he shall go acquit.

Mr. RAYNER. That when he has been acquitted he shall stay acquitted. I do not believe in a man being acquitted and afterwards being convicted. If acquitted once he ought to be acquitted forever.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is arguing for a much larger rule than the committee has reported, and a larger innovation.

Mr. President, the case of The United States v. Ball is a very interesting case, as I was saying, in overruling the English doctrine. I will state it again for the moment, for it goes to this question of jeopardy. It would not cover all such cases. It was a case where there were two brothers Ball, and another man, who were indicted for murder. One was acquitted. The other two were convicted. They appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court reversed the conviction upon the ground that the indictment was bad. A new indictment was found, which included the man who was acquitted. He plead former acquittal, and the court below overruled The Supreme Court sustained it, and said that he his plea.

could not be again put upon trial.

Mr. RAYNER. I know the case.

Mr. SPOONER. The court said:

As to the defendant, who had been acquitted by the verdict duly returned and received, the court could take no other action than to order his discharge. The verdict of acquittal was final and could not be reviewed, on error or otherwise, without putting him twice in jeopardy and thereby violating the Constitution. However it may be in England, in this country a verdict of acquittal, although not followed by any judgment, is a bar to a subsequent prosecution for the same offense. (U. S. v. Ball, 163 U. S., 671.)

That is where the indictment was bad.

Mr. President, I do not intend to take further time. The matter has been thoroughly argued. I am content to leave it, under the bill, if it shall become a law, to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is their function to determine what is jeopardy. It is their function to protect the citizens of the United States against any invasion of the constitutional guaranty as to double jeopardy. I think we can rely upon the court to protect as far as the Constitution requires it all defendants, without supplementing the Constitution by the Senator's amendment to this bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas obtained the floor.

Mr. President Mr. CHILLOM.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Kean in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Illinois? Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Arkansas would prefer to go on to-morrow, I desire to move an executive session.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. NELSON. Before the motion is put, I should like to make a statement. I desire to state that I shall move to take up this bill for consideration at the earliest practicable moment to-morrow morning after the routine morning business, not to interfere, however, with appropriation bills.

Mr. LODGE. I gave notice yesterday that I would call up the Philippine bank bill. Of course, if the pending bill is not to be disposed of, there will be no chance to have anything else done. I feel bound now to give notice that I shall try to call up the Philippine bank bill and dispose of it at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. CULLOM. I will state in addition to that that there is a very important appropriation bill ready to be taken up tomorrow.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that all the amendments to the pending bill submitted to-day be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH H. RICE.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 6731) granting a pension to Elizabeth Huntington Rice.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth H. Rice, widow of Edmund Rice, late colonel Nineteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and brigadier-general, United States Army, retired, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving her a pen receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth H. Rice."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 13, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, that our Republic holds in grateful memory all who have contributed to its life and per-petuity, especially that host of illustrious men "who have breathed their spirits into its institutions" and made it great and glorious; that to-day the hearts of eighty millions will beat with patriotic pride and take the name of Abraham Lincoln upon reverent lips and vie with each other in telling the story of his marvelous life and achievements. Out of obscurity Thou didst lead him to be the savior of his people. "With malice toward none and charity for all" he died a martyr to liberty and freedom. God grant that we may keep his memory sacred to our hearts and honor ourselves by following his example in American citizenship. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ,

JAPANESE SCHOOLS.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the Record some remarks upon the Japanese schools.

mous consent to extend remarks in the Record upon the subject indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES JUDGE NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24887) providing for a United States judge for the northern district of Alabama. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.. That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a district judge for the northern judicial district of Alabama, who shall possess and exercise all the powers conferred by existing law upon the judges of the district courts of the United States, and who shall possess the same powers and perform the same duties within the said northern judicial district of Alabama as are now possessed by and performed by the district judge of the United States in any of the judicial districts established by law, and he shall receive the same compensation now or hereafter prescribed by law in respect to other district judges of the United States: And provided, That the judge appointed under this act shall reside at Birmingham, in said district.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, Loffer, the following amond.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 2, after the words "provided, That," insert the words "after appointment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the title be amended by inserting, after the word "northern," the word "judicial."

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Clayton, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table. Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for the action just taken. This bill presents a most meritorious case. The facts are stated in the report, which I prepared and presented. I here insert it in the RECORD. It is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 24887) providing for a United States judge for the northern judicial district of Alabama, having had the same under consideration, report it back with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

At present there is only one judge for both the northern and middle judicial districts of Alabama, and he resides at Montgomery, in the middle district.

It is impossible for one judge to do the work of both districts. The terms of the circuit and district courts in the northern district of Alabama are held as follows:

Huntsville: April and October; duration of term, two months.
Anniston: May and November; duration of term, two months. Tuscaloosa: January and June; duration of term, three weeks. Birmingham: March and September; duration of term, six months. Total, about eleven months.

Total, about eleven months.

Total, about eleven months.

Total different intervals from time to time. The minimum requirement for holding the district court is also held there the first Monday in each month. Besides, special terms of the courts have been held there at different intervals from time to time. The minimum requirement for holding the district and circuit courts by the present judge in the northern and middle judicial districts aggregates about thirteen months in each year. In the southern district, where there is a judge residing at Mobile, court is in session about five months in each year. In addition to the terms of the court there the judge has much work to do in chambers at all times, as there is a very considerable admiralty business done at that port. Besides, this judge holds court twice a year at Selma, Ala., in his district, and is frequently called to serve on the circuit court of appeals at New Orleans. All his time is now occupied.

Circuit Judge Shelby has held the circuit court at Huntsville since occupied.

Circuit Judge Shelby has held the circuit court at Huntsville since May, 1905. Judge Boarman, of Louisiana, held the district court there last year. Judge Toulmin, of the southern district, has held all the terms of court at Anniston. The judge of the northern and middle district, Judge Jones, held the court at Tuscaloosa in May, 1906. The business at Huntsville, Tuscaloosa, and Anniston is fairly well up to date.

For many years district judges from neighboring States have been called in to assist in the northern district of Alabama, but such assistance as these judges have been able to give has not been sufficient to dispose of the business or to relieve the congested condition of the dispose of the business of the United States courts is about three years behind. There are about 300 civil cases on the docket there. It takes nearly three years to get a civil case to trial at Birmingham. That city is the center of large coal-mining, frommining, and manufacturing industries. The commerce and tonnage there is greater than at any other point in the entire South. There are fourteen rallroads and two more are being built. Many civil suits are brought there against foreign corporations, and these suits are, at the instance of the attorneys for these corporations, generally removed to the Federal courts.

At the last session of Congress an act was passed requiring the court at Birmingham to be held six months in each year. It has been impossible for the present judge to strictly comply with this law, and it is obvious that this act has not afforded the desired relief. During the year ending June 30, 1906, circuit and district courts were held at the different places in the northern district as follows:

Huntsville: By Circuit Judge Shelby______ By Judge Boarman, of Louisiana_____ Anniston: Judge Toulmin, of southern district of Alabama

Birmingham:

Judge Jones

Judge Toulmin

27 Tuscaloosa: Judge Jones_____

It is understood, of course, that this shows only a fraction of the work performed by the present judge. It is an ascertained fact that besides holding courts at Montgomery he holds court for the northern district at chambers in Montgomery many days each month. Indeed, when he is at Montgomery he transacts more or less business for the northern district—that is, the Birmingham district—every day, such as orders in bankruptcy cases, hearing and deciding cases in equity, etc. On June 30, 1906, there were pending in the northern district of Alabama 504 criminal and civil cases, all of them said to be live cases, Besides, there were pending there at the same time 349 bankruptcy cases. At the same time there were pending 230 criminal and civil cases at Montgomery, most of them live cases. Besides, there were pending at Montgomery at the same time 302 bankruptcy cases.

The Department of Justice recently made a very thorough examination of the conditions in Alabama and elsewhere in nine cases in which bills were introduced into Congress for additional judges. This investigation showed the necessity for four more district judges, one of them for the northern district of Alabama.

For several years past the condition of the business in the

For several years past the condition of the business in the United States courts in the northern district of Alabama has presented an urgent case for relief. Several bills have been presented an urgent case for relief. Several bills have been proposed. I introduced one for an additional judge of the middle and northern districts. That bill did not meet with the favor of the committee nor with the approval of the Department of Justice. Besides, one of my colleagues has always opposed it, upon the ground that a separate judge for the northern judicial district of Alabama was what was needed—that district now having no separate judge—and not an additional judge for the two districts. for the two districts.

He has informed me that he would object to the consideration of any bill except one in present form—that is to say, the bill which has just been read at the Clerk's desk, and which I also Of course the objection of any one Member would have defeated the passage of this bill. Whatever may have been my preférence as to the details of the matter, I did not succeed in getting the approval of the committee or the Department of Justice, or the cooperation of all of my colleagues from Alabama, for any measure except the bill which has just passed.

During the present Congress the Department of Justice has recommended the appointment of four additional judges. One for Alabama, one for Nebraska, one for Ohio, and one for Cali-fornia. The House has recently passed bills authorizing an additional judge in each of the States of Ohio and California and in the Territory of Arizona.

The Department of Justice, in reply to my letter to the Attorney-General, has sent me the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, February 9, 1907.

Hon. Henry D. Clayton, Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives.

Sir: The Department is in receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, inclosing H. R. 24887, providing for a United States judge for the northern district of Alabama, and report thereon from the Committee on the Judiciary.

I have the honor to say that this Department recently made an investigation as to the necessity for a United States judge for the northern district of Alabama, and that the facts contained in the committee report which you inclose are in accord with the result of such investigation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Is there not a good deal of objection to this bill both in Clay County and Jackson County?

Mr. ELLIS. There has been some objection, but the matter has been thoroughly thrashed out before the committee, and the amendments virtually satisfy everybody.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman says the amendments do satisfy those who oppose it?

Mr. ELLIS. Yes. The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Ellis, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF SCHOOL FUNDS TO SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. PATTERSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 8065) to provide for the transfer to the State of South Carolina of certain school funds for the use of free schools in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke, in said State, and to consider the same at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF EDUCATION,
Washington, February 9, 1907.

Hon. James R. Mann, House of Representatives, United States, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, United States,

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Mann: Replying to your inquiry by telephone, with reference to Senate bill 8065, to provide for the transfer to the State of South Carolina of certain school funds for the use of free schools in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke, in said State, I beg to submit the following statement:

It appears from the acts relating to the funds in question, namely, Chapter CC, Statutes at Large, Volume XIV, passed July 16, 1866; Chapter CCCXXXVII, Statutes at Large, Volume XVII, approved June 8, 1872, and Chapter CCLX of the same, approved March 3, 1873, that these funds arose from the sale of "school farm lands" in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke, South Carolina, such school farm lands having been reserved for school purposes from certain lands which came into the hands of the General Government through failure of the owners to pay the direct tax imposed in the year 1862. The act of March 3, 1873, provided that such funds should be turned over to the Secretary of the Treasury and invested by said Secretary in bonds of the United States to be by him retained as a fund for the use and support of free public schools in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke in equal parts, the interest of which shall annually be expended by a special board of three commissioners to be appointed by and act under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and removable at his discretion, to increase the efficiency of any free public schools established and sustained in said parishes by the authority of said State if such school shall exist, otherwise at the discretion of said commissioners.

I have thus far been unable to find any report or record of the pro-lished and sustained in said parishes by the authority of said State if such school shall exist, otherwise at the discretion of said commissioners.

I have thus far been unable to find any report or record of the proceedings of these commissioners or of the use which they have made of these funds. I am informed by the Treasury Department that no such report or record is known in that Department. I have caused the reports of the education department of the State of South Carolina to be examined and find in them no reference to these funds, except that in the fifteenth annual report of the State superintendent of education, 1883, there appears in the statement of Thomas H. Wheeler, school commissioner of Beaufort County, the following words: "The districts in St. Luke and St. Helena parishes received aid from the United States Government." No information concerning these funds is to be found in the publications of the Bureau of Education. The names of the special commissioners appear in the latest Official Register of the United States, Volume I, page 294. They are D. W. Bythewood, E. J. Ravenah, and Thomas G. White, all of Beaufort, S. C., each of whom receives compensation to the amount of $50 a year. I am informed that Mr. Bythewood acts as special disbursing officer of the Treasury Department in this matter.

Referring to the question whether it is desirable that these funds be turned over to the State of South Carolina in trust for the purposes for which they are intended, in the absence of definite information concerning the actual disposition of the funds I can only offer subsuggestion as grows out of the past practice of the United States Government in its relations with the school systems of the several States. Such assistance as has been extended by the National Government to the several States for educational purposes has been generally in the form of public lands or of funds derived from the sale of such lands.

The earliest grant was made to Ohio in 1802, where section No. 16 in every township was gr ceeds of the sales of public lands "shall be paid to the said States to be used as a permanent fund, the interest of which only shall be ex-pended for the support of common schools within said States, re-spectively."

be used as a permanent fund, the interest of which only shall be expended for the support of common schools within said States, respectively."

These provisions show that it has been the policy of the General Government to grant lands and funds for educational purposes to the several States, and to vest in such States the management of the funds, including those derived from the sale of school lands.

The case presented by the school farm lands of South Carolina, with which Senate bill 8065 deals, is not altogether parallel with those mentioned above. The origin of the funds was different, and those funds have hitherto been administered by the Treasury Department of the General Government. It does not appear, however, that the intent of the grant was essentially different from that of the several grants referred to above. The act of July 16, 1866, provided that "the proceeds of said sales, after paying expenses of the surveys and sales, shall be invested in United States bonds, the interest of which shall be appropriated "to the slands in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke."

The act of March 3, 1873, provides that the interest on the bonds purchased with these funds "shall annually be expended to increase the efficiency of any free public schools established and sustained in said parishes by authority of said State, if such schools shall exist, otherwise at the discretion of the commissioners hereinafter named." It is clear from the provisions of the act last named that these funds are intended to supplement the provisions of the public school system of the State so far as these two parishes are concerned, and only in default of public schools may they be devoted to the support of other schools.

In view of these facts, it seems to me that Senate bill 8065, in pro-schools.

In view of these facts, it seems to me that Senate bill 8065, in providing for the transfer to the State of South Carolina of the funds derived from the sale of the lands in question, to be held in trust for the support of the common schools of the State in the two parishes named, is in accord with the established and well-nigh universal practice of the General Government in dealing with educational grants for the benefit of the several States.

I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully,

ELMER ELLSWORTH BROWN,

Commissioner.

Commissioner.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PATTERSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar House bill, H. R. 25056, on the House Calendar do lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and it was so ordered.

CALIFORNIA DÉBRIS COMMISSION.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13367) to amend section 13 of an act of March 1, 1893, entitled "An act to create the California Débris Commission and regulate hydraulic mining in the State of California," which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13 of an act of March 1, 1893, entitled "An act to create the California Débris Commission and regulate mining in the State of California," is hereby amended so as to read as mining in the State of California," is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 13. That in case a majority of the members of said Commission, within thirty days after the time so fixed, concur in the decision in favor of the petitioner or petitioners, the said Commission shall thereupon make an order directing the methods and specifying in detail the manner in which operations shall proceed in such mine or mines; what restraining or impounding works, if any, if facilities therefor can be found, shall be built and maintained; how and of what material; where to be located; and in general set forth such further requirements and safeguards as will protect the public interests and prevent injury to the said navigable rivers and the lands adjacent thereto, with such further conditions and limitations as will observe all the provisions of this act in relation to the working thereof and the payment of taxes on the gross proceeds of the same: Provided, That all expense incurred in complying with said order shall be borne by the owner or owners of such mine or mines: And provided further, That where it shall appear to said Commission that hydraulic mining may be carried on without injury to the navigation of said navigable rivers and the lands adjacent thereto, an order may be made authorizing such mining to be carried on without requiring the construction of any restraining or impounding works or any settling reservoirs: And provided also, That where such an order is made a license to mine no taxes provided for herein on the gross proceeds of such mining operations shall be collected."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman to explain the change in the law

What committee reported the bill?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The Committee on Mines and Mining has unanimously reported the bill. It is a bill introduced by my predecessor, Mr. Gillett, and the only change in the law is the clause at the end of the section from the words "And provided further," and is covered in the latter part of the report of the committee:

The purpose of the present bill is to authorize and empower the California Débris Commission to order that hydraulic mining may be carried on without first going to a needless expense of building dams, barriers, etc., where the same can be done without injuring the navigability of the rivers or lands lying adjacent thereto.

It leaves the whole matter in the hands of the Commission, as it always has—only gives them discretion in the matter of some small mines lying back in the mountains where mining could be done without injury to the rivers

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is a local measure?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. It is entirely local to California, and the entire California delegation is satisfied with it.

Mr. MANN. Is this a matter that has been considered in any way at all by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I do not know.
Mr. MANN. There has been considerable complaint out there about the Commission and its work in reference to filling up at least one of the rivers. That has been before our committee a number of times

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Well, this bill would not interfere in any manner with that state of affairs. It merely gives this Commission discretion in certain places. There are mines where it is not necessary to construct any restraining works at all, yet under the act it is absolutely necessary to construct works whether they are needed or not, as the Commission abso-

Mr. MANN. Have you not had a lot of litigation out there?
Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. There has been a large amount of litigation. It is a matter which in years past attracted the attention of Congress, and resulted in the passage of the act providing for the California Débris Commission, under which all hydraulic mining has to be done. A man desiring to do any hydraulic mining must at first make an application to this Commission for a permit to do so. After making the application, it is advertised, allowing anyone to come before the Commission in regard to the subject, and then the Commission, if they deem it proper, will allow works to be constructed, and after the works are constructed they give a permit. This little clause added to one section of the bill gives this Commission authority to allow work to be performed when it is not necessary to construct any works.

Mr. MANN. Does it affect in any way this litigation?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. No, it does not affect the litigation at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. Will the gentleman indicate his amendment?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. In line 17, page 2, change the spelling of the word "provided."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the typographical error in line 17, page 2, making the word "provided."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF CERTAIN TIMBER ON MENOMINEE INDIAN RESERVATION, WIS.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24043) to authorize the sale of timber on certain of the land reserved for the use of the Menominee tribe of Indians, in the State of Wisconsin.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the blown-down timber and the standing merchantable timber on the sections containing blown-down timber in the north half of township No. 29, range No. 13 east; the north half of township No. 29, range No. 13 east; and in the south half of township No. 30, range No. 13 east, on the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin, as herein provided, such sale to be in addition to the amount authorized to be sold annually by the act of June 12, 1890 (26 Stat. L., p. 146).

Sec. 2. That the timber shall be sold on stumpage, the sale to be confined to the sections containing blown-down timber, to the highest bidder or bidders, for cash, after due advertisement inviting proposals, in such manner and at such time and place as the Secretary may direct. And the Secretary shall appoint a competent man, who shall be a practical logger, to superintend the marking and cutting of the timber and the scaling of the logs, the timber to be paid for according to the Government scale, no sale, however, to be valid until approved by sald Secretary. The compensation of the superintendent and scalers shall be fixed by the Secretary.

Sec. 3. That from the net proceeds of sales of said Menominee timber shall be deducted one-fifth part, which shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Menominee Indians in Wisconsin, to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of said Indians, and the residue of said proceeds shall be funded in the United States Treasury, interest on which shall be allowed said tribe annually at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, to be paid to the tribe per capita, or expended for their benefit under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 4. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

On motion of Mr. Brown, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF HOMESTEAD AND OTHER ENTRYMEN PAYING EXCESS LEGAL FEES, ETC.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 22588) for the relief of homestead and other entrymen who have been required to pay more than the legal fees, commissions, excesses, and purchase money.

excesses, and purchase money.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of June 16, 1880 (21 Stat., p. 287), be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. That in all cases where homestead or timber-culture or desert-land entries or other entries of public lands have heretofore or shall hereafter be canceled for conflict, or where, from any cause, the entry has been erroneously allowed and can not be confirmed, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be repaid to the person who made such entry, or to his heirs or assigns, the fees and commissions, amount of purchase money, and excesses paid upon the same, upon the surrender of the duplicate receipt and the execution of a proper relinquishment of all claims to said land, whenever such entry shall have been duly canceled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and in all cases where parties have been improperly charged the double-minimum price for minimum lands, or where they have been required to pay more than the lawful fees, commissions, excesses, or purchase money, the excess shall in like manner be repaid to the entryman or to his heirs or legal representatives."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman what is the extent of the changes this makes in existing law?

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, in 1825 the first statute was passed, and it provided for the return of the purchase money in cases where entries had been erroneously allowed. That was amended in 1880, so that the purchase money or excess might be returned where the double minimum price had been by mis-take charged for minimum price land. That is the law at the present time governing both of these propositions. There is still a class of cases where mistakes have been made not covered by law, such as, for example, where a land officer has by mistake of the law taken more than the legal price under the statute. There are instances where Indian reservations have been opened and prices have been fixed; for instance, $1.25 an acre for land entered within a certain period, 75 cents or $1 an acre for land entered in another period, and the officer has received the $1.25 price for lands where 75 cents or $1 should have been received under the law. Under the administration of the Land Department, carrying on so large a business as it does, mistakes will necessarily arise, and this bill has been prepared in the Department for the purpose of meeting those cases.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman if this does not involve a large amount of money?

Mr. MARTIN. I think not.

Mr. PAYNE. I have been informed it does.
Mr. MARTIN. Of course, mistakes of this kind have been made, but the class of cases not now reached by the law is limited, and would not cover a very large amount of money.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think for the present I shall have to object.

Mr. LACEY. I trust the gentleman from New York will not

Mr. MARTIN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] for a moment.

Mr. LACEY. I would suggest to my friend that while it does involve a considerable amount of money, it does not involve any of the Government's money. The Government has got somebody else's money by mistake.

Mr. MANN. That is the case with everything.
Mr. LACEY. Oh, no; not at all. It only occasionally occurs, and they want to get rid of it. Instead of having it come in here each time to the Committee on Claims it is to allow them to adjust these matters and pay back wherever they have taken money that does not belong to them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I understand the law now, the minimum is $1.25 an acre, and the double minimum is $2.50 an acre. Is that correct?

Mr. LACEY. That is railroad land.
Mr. MARTIN. I would say this is already covered by the law. The law now specifically, by the act of 1880, returns the excess always where the double minimum price has been taken for a minimum land. It does notMr. MANN. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that there has been a good deal of suspicion created at times, with reference to the existing law, about the return of money paid on desert-land claims and other entries of that sort?

Mr. MARTIN. I am not aware of it if any suspicion of that kind ever existed.

Mr. MANN. I will be glad, then, to give the gentleman some evidence on the subject.

Mr. MARTIN. I think, Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from New York has suggested, it is a matter that may involve the payment of some money, but whatever may be said along that line it certainly does not involve the payment of any money that the Government rightfully holds. The same rule between private individuals will compel an individual to return what he has received purely by mistake; and so every time a case of this kind gets into the Court of Claims invariably, upon the facts that would be reached by this law, the Government has to return it at the end of litigation in the Court of Claims, and after taking of time and the expenditure of money on behalf of the Government. For all entries now that are errone-ously made, where the party does not get the land, the Department adjusts the claim and returns the money. where double minimum price is charged for minimum land they adjust the claim of excess and return the money. in other cases, where by mistake they have received more than the lawful price for lands, there is no law now authorizing the return.

Mr. MANN. Is not this the statute now? Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think we had better insist upon the objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] objects.

COLUMBIA INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 25550.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks consideration of a bill H. R. 25550, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25550) confirming entries and applications under section 2306 of the Revised Statutes of the United States for lands embraced in what was formerly the Columbia Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington.

of Washington.

Be it enacted, etc., That all lands in the former Columbia Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, which are embraced in entries heretofore allowed under section 2306 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or which are embraced in any application to make entry under said section 2306, which were presented before the lands covered by such application were withdrawn under the reclamation act, are hereby declared to be subject to such entries, and applications and entries shall be allowed and patents shall be issued thereunder in the same manner and upon the same conditions under which entries are allowed and patents are issued under said section 2306 for other public lands of the United States, and all patents heretofore issued under such entries are hereby confirmed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman would tell us what the bill does.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, in 1884 we passed an act declaring all lands formerly known as the "Columbia Indian Reservation" to be opened to homestead entry, and under the practice of the Department we accepted soldiers' additional homesteads for several years, and several claims went to a patent, and several applications were pending when they decided that these lands under the terms of that act were not subject to a soldier's additional homestead application and entry, and therefore they held them up. The land involved consists of about a thousand acres. Several parties have gone in and have made very valuable improvements, and the object of this bill is simply to confirm those applications and entries made under the practice of the Department, and this bill was prepared by the Department itself to cover that matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time,

was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Jones of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF CERTAIN LANDS TO BUFFALO, WYO.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 23324).

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23324) authorizing the sale of certain lands to the city of Buffalo, Wyo.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell to the city of Buffalo, Johnson County, Wyo.,

for the sum of $1.25 an acre, for use as a public park and fair grounds, the following described lands: The southwest quarter of the southeast quarter and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 27 and the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and lot 5 of section 34, in township 51 north of range 82 west of the sixth principal meridian.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 7 and 8 strike out the words "the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter" and insert in lieu thereof the words "lot twelve."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Mondell, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS TO INDIANS OF LA POINTE INDIAN RESERVA-TION, WIS.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the Senate bill 2787, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (8. 2787) to amend the act of Congress approved February 11, 1901, entitled "An act providing for allotments of lands in severalty to the Indians of the La Pointe or Bad River Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin."

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved February 11, 1901 (31 Stat., p. 766), entitled "An act providing for allotments of lands in severalty to the Indians of the La Pointe or Bad River Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin," shall not be construed so as to bar or in any manner abridge or curtail the right of any Indian to allotment on said reservation as provided by the treaty concluded with the Chippewas of Lake Superior and the Mississippi September 30, 1854.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "reservation," in li ords "whether born before or after the passage of said act. in line 9, the

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to know what the bill is.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House and the gentleman from Illinois, I will say that this bill is a Department bill, and was introduced for the purpose of correcting an injustice under the allotment act of February 11, 1901. In that law there was a clause that confines the allotment to the Indians living, resident, and entitled to reside on the La Pointe or Bad River Indian Reservation.

I will refer to what the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs say of this bill and the necessity for it. In a communication from the Secretary of the Interior to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs he states as follows:

The object of the amendment, as set forth in the Commissioner's report, is to authorize allotments on the reservation to full-blood non-resident Indians, who by the terms of the act of February 11, 1901, and the decision of the Department of June 8, 1905, have been barred from receiving such allotments.

In addition, I will read to you a letter from Commissioner Leupp, dated December 4, 1905, to the Secretary:

Leupp, dated December 4, 1905, to the Secretary:

The question presented was whether these nonresidents should be allotted, as they were entitled under the treaty, or did the act of February 11, 1901, bar such rights? Under date of June 8, 1905, the Department decided that the act of February 11, 1901, confined the right of allotment to "each Indian now living and residing on said reservation and entitled to so reside," and therefore the full-blood nonresident members were not entitled to allotment. It was further held that relief for these Indians should be sought at the hands of Congress. This decision and its result were reported to the agent, and great dissatisfaction was thereby created among the Indians, as there were a good many whose names were on the schedule who were not entitled to allotment under the law.

This bill I will say to the gentlement was drafted by the contempt of the contempt of the contempt.

This bill, I will say to the gentleman, was drafted by the Department, and is, as stated, to correct an interpretation that they were compelled to put upon the law of 1901. It authorizes the allotment to Indians belonging to this reservation who were off the reservation and whom the Department have decided are entitled to these allotments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed. On motion of Mr. Brown, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 23821) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the fortification bill, nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, before that consent is granted, will the gentleman give the House some idea of the points of difference between the two Houses?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Well, the points are somewhat numer-The points include large increase of appropriations for fire control, and they also include large items for repair of the devastations by reason of the Gulf storm. They involve some other items. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that hearings have been had on some of the items since the bill passed the Senate, that the conferees of both Houses may have information concerning them. The evidence was not taken as to the extent of the ravages of the Gulf storm in November. These estimates reached the House after the hearings closed. Provision was put upon the Senate bill, and no hearings were had until recently, and it was there considered as to the order and the necessity of speed in doing the work.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do the minority members of the committee agree with you?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There has been no such understanding except as to the ordinary course. The minority understood that I would ask for this order, which is known to the Representative from Mobile, who is on the whole committee, but not on the subcommittee, and he is very much interested in the matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall not object.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Chair announced the following conferees: Mr. Smith of Iowa, Mr. Keifer, and Mr. Fitzgerald.

OMNIBUS LIGHT-HOUSE BILL.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill known as the omnibus light-house bill, and to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the omnibus light-house bill, to nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and to ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman make some statement of the differences between the two Houses?

Mr. MANN. The bill, as it passed the House, carried items amounting to $1,600,000 exclusive of light-house keepers' dwellings. The Senate have added items amounting to about $800,000, and have stricken out two small items from the House bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it the general desire of the committee to go to conference?

Mr. MANN. It is by direction of the committee this morning that I make the request.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall not object. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. Mann, Mr. Stevens of Minnesota, and Mr. Adamson.

PATENTS TO OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 224) directing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to investigate and report to Congress concerning existing patents granted to officers and employees of the Government in certain cases, with a Senate amendment thereto.

Mr. CHANEY. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERMARRIED CHEROKEE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Indian

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The Senate and House of Representatives:

The Supreme Court of the United States, in its decision of November 5, 1906, in the case of Daniel Red Bird, the Cherokee Nation, et al., v. The United States, held that "the rights and privileges of those white citizens who intermarried with Cherokee citizens subsequent to the 1st day of November, 1875, do not extend to the right of soil or interest in any of the vested funds of the Cherokee Nation, and such intermarried persons are not entitled to share in the allotment of the lands or in the distribution of any of the funds belonging to said nation, and are not entitled to be enrolled for such purposes; that those white persons who intermarried with Delaware or Shawnee citizens of the Cherokee Nation either prior or subsequent to November 1, 1875, and those who intermarried with Cherokees by blood and subsequently, being left a widow or widower by the death of the Cherokee wife or husband, intermarried with persons not of Cherokee biood, and those white men who, having married Cherokee women and subsequently abandoned their Cherokee wives, have no part or share in the Cherokee property, and are not entitled to participate in the allotment of the lands or in the distribution of the funds of the Cherokee Nation or people, and are not entitled to be enrolled for such purpose."

I invite your attention to the urgent necessity for legislation for the relief of intermarried citizens of the Cherokee Nation adversely affected by such decision, many of whom have made permanent and valuable improvements upon lands of the nation, where they have resided for many years, undisturbed in their possession, under the belief that they were entitled to the same rights in the lands as native-born citizens of such nation.

In the decision of the court it was stated that, as to the improvements made by these intermarried citizens, "they seem to have been treated as those of a tenant who had made them under an agreement that they should remain his."

As the lands of the nation are being allotted under the act of June 28, 1898 (30 Stat., 495), and subsequent legislation to the other members of the tribes, these intermarried citizens will lose their improvements to citizens of the nation entitled to enrollment. I therefore earnestly recommend the passage of an act substantially as follows:

"That for sixty days after the approval of this act white persons who intermarried with Cherokee citizens prior to July 1, 1902, and made permanent and valuable improvements on lands belonging to the Cherokee Nation prior to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the

FORT BERTHOLD INDIAN RESERVATION, N. DAK.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution from the Senate of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 7495) to define the status of certain patents and pending entries, selections, and filings on lands formerly within the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, N. Dak.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be complied with.

VALIDATION OF BONDS OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12857) to validate certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico with reference to the issuance of certain bonds.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of the thirty-fourth legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico entitled "An act providing for additional buildings for the New Mexico Military Institute at Roswell," approved February 20, 1901, and the act of the same assembly and session entitled "An act providing for additional buildings for the New Mexico Insane Asylum at Las Vegas," approved March 21, 1901, and the act of the same assembly and session entitled "An act to provide for the issue of bonds for the New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts," approved March 21, 1901, and chapter 53 of the acts of the thirty-fifth legislative assembly of said Territory of New Mexico, entitled "An act creating two armory beards of control and providing for the construction of armories in the cities of Las Vegas and Albuquerque, and authorizing an issue of bonds therefor," be, and each of said acts hereby is, approved, ratified, validated, Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker reserving the side of the seminatory of the construction of armories in the cities of Las Vegas and each of said acts hereby is, approved, ratified, validated, and confirmed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman whether or not the bonds have been issued and sold and the money raised and these buildings erected by means of the money raised under this

Mr. BATES. I understand so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the necessity for Congress acting upon it?

Mr. BATES. They want authority to validate the bonds.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It simply validates the bonds that have been issued? I understand the bonds have not been sold, and that the reason is that there is some question arising as to the validity of the bonds. I desire to ask if there are any suits pending?

Mr. BATES. There are no suits pending, and, as I understand, the bonds have not been sold.

Mr. MANN. I would like to say to the gentleman that a few years ago there was an effort made to pass a bill through the House validating certain bonds of New Mexico where there was a good deal of opposition engendered and the project was defeated. Is this the same thing?

Mr. ANDREWS. No. Mr. BATES. This is for the purpose set forth in the bill, for building certain buildings.

Mr. MANN. Of course we have not the original bills of the legislature here, and we do not know what they cover.

Mr. BATES. I understand that the bonds have been issued and are ready for sale; they have not been disposed of, but are waiting until the act validating the bonds is passed.

Mr. MANN. There was a question here in reference to a mat-ter very much like this where the people who had the bonds wanted to obtain an act of Congress to make them good. I suppose they hadn't paid very much for them, but the project did not go through.

Mr. BATES. This is not that case and is not a similar case. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. These bonds have not been hypothecated or sold, as I understand. The question is being held until the legislation is had. It seems to me this remedial legislation should be passed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time;

was read the third time, and passed.

COUNTY OF TAOS, N. MEX.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12858) permitting the county of Taos, in the Territory of New Mexico, to refund its indebtedness at a lower rate of interest.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the laws of the United States limiting the indebtedness of counties in the Territories, the county of Taos, in the Territory of New Mexico, be, and the same is hereby, authorized and empowered to refund its floating indebtedness of $7,500 and its bonded indebtedness of $42,400 by an issue of its bonds therefor, under the laws of the said Territory providing for the refunding of county indebtedness: Provided, That said bonds shall not run for more than twenty years nor bear interest at a higher rate than 5 per cent per annum, nor shall the same be sold for less than par: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed as in any manner creating any liability upon the part of the United States. strued as in United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SCHOOL LAND IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. McGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24655) to authorize the legislature of Oklahoma to dispose of a certain section of school land.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the legislature of the State of Oklahoma is hereby authorized to grant section 16, in township 14, north of range 4, east of the Indian meridian, Lincoln County, Okla., to the board of education of the city of Chandler, in said county, for school purposes upon such terms as the said legislature may impose.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 3, after the word "Oklahoma," insert the words "when the State of Oklahoma shall have been admitted."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Oklahoma explain the necessity of this legislation? Why is it the legislature of the State of Oklahoma can not do this without an act of Congress? The land will go to the State for educational purposes, and it goes with their full control and authority.

Mr. McGUIRE. The enabling act provides that the legislature of Oklahoma can dispose of this school land if it desires, but if it does dispose of it it must be done to the highest bidder. The purpose is to give a section of school land not to the highest bidder, but to the city schools. The reason for the bill is this: There are nine townships adjacent to the city of Chandler that are set aside for school purposes—that is, for common schools, This is known as "lieu land." It has been impossible to support schools where these lieu lands were chosen by the authorities, and these children have had to go necessarily to the Chandler school. This has been done at a very great expense to the city of Chandler. The common schools of every Territory have had the benefit of lieu lands, and the city of Chandler and the county of Lincoln have been paying for it.

They have carried the burden. This is to reimburse them to a limited degree for the expenditures they have incurred for the benefit of all the schools of the Territory.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to wait until after Oklahoma is admitted to the Union and then let the legislature of the State of Oklahoma ask for this legislation?

Mr. McGUIRE. That is exactly what I am trying to do with this bill. I would be glad to do that if it would not be too late, but it would be too late. We could not then reimburse these people for the money that they have expended.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This bill does not make a disposition of the land?

Mr. McGUIRE. No. Mr. WILLIAMS. It merely enables the legislature of Oklahoma to do it?

Mr. McGUIRE. That is the idea.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 24925-the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is closed, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY OF THE NAVY.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY OF THE NAVY.

Pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty; officers on waiting orders; officers on the retired list; clerks to commandants of yards and stations; clerks to paymasters at yards and stations, general storekeepers, receiving ships, and other vessels; commutation of quarters for officers on shore not occupying public quarters for flowing boatswains, gunners, carpenters, sailmakers, warrant machinists, pharmacists, and mates, and also naval constructors and assistant naval constructors; for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them, or commutation of suarters not to exceed the amount which an officer would receive were he not serving with troops; pay of enlisted men on the retired list; extra pay to men reculisting under honorable discharge; interest on deposits by men; pay of perfect, see men, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineers force, and men detailed for duty with Naval Militia, and for the Fish Commission, 36,000 men; and the number of enlisted men shall be exclusive of those undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service at expiration of such cordinement; and as many warrant machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint, not to exceed 20 in any one year; and 2,500 apprentice seamen under training stations and on board training ships, at the pay prescribed by law, $21,000,000.

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, require the whole or a part of the bounty allowed upon enlistment to be refunded in cases where men are discharged during the first year of enlistment by request, for inaptitude, as undesirable, or for disability not incurred in line of duty: Provided, that officers of the Navy above the grade of captain, who served with credit in the regular from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] will reserve his point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, is it necessary to reserve all points of order at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. It is necessary to state what points of order are reserved against this section at this time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, then I reserve a point of order against the language on page 2, commencing in line 5, ending with line 11.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I also reserve the point of order upon the words "thirty-six thousand men," in line 17, page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] desire to discuss any of the points of order?

Mr. FOSS. So far as the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is concerned, which I think comes up first upon the paragraph—

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, Mr. Chairman, my purpose is to have the gentleman explain the provision. I reserve the point

I did not make the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I would say that this provision has been put in here and is due to a recent decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, disallowing commutation for quarters for officers where there are no public quarters,

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the attention of the gentleman to the language of this provision, that it is for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops. When do the naval officers serve with troops?

Mr. FOSS. The decision of the Comptroller was to the effect that where a naval officer was stationed at a navy-yard he was there with men—that is to say, the men in the navy-yard ne was there with men—that is to say, the men in the navy-yard were construed by him as troops. It was a roundabout construction, and in applying the Army law, which applies also to the Navy, the decision of the Comptroller was to the effect that commutation for quarters could not be allowed. This puts it on the same basis as Army officers. I have here the letter from the Chief Quartermaster and also a letter from the Navy Department, which I will be pleased to put into the RECORD.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 5, 1907.

Sir: I have the honor to invite the attention of the committee to the inclosed copy of a memorandum from the Bureau of Navigation requesting that the clause providing for "hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters; which clause appears in the bill making appropriations for the naval service as it passed the House, be amended so as to provide for the allowance, in the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers, of payments for such commutation of quarters made prior to July 1, 1907.

Inasmuch as the provision as it now reads in the naval bill will not be effective until July 1, 1907, and will not cover payments made on the account referred to prior to that date, the Department recommends that the suggested amendment be made.

A duplicate of this communication has this day been addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate.

Very respectfully,

V. H. Myroung for

Hon. George Edmund Foss, Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, BUREAU OF NAVIGATION, Washington, D. C., February 2, 1907.

[Memorandum for the Department.]

Washington, D. C., February 2, 1997.

[Memorandum for the Department.]

On November 30 last this Bureau had the honor to invite the attention of the Department to a decision rendered by the Comptroller of the Treasury that officers of the Navy serving on shore with troops are not entitled to commutation of quarters. The resulting hardship of this decision upon officers ordered on shore duty with enlisted men was pointed out and as a remedy it was suggested that Congress be asked to insert the following language in the naval appropriation bill:

"For hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them, or commutation of quarters not to exceed the amount which an officer would receive were he not serving with troops."

This request received favorable action in Congress, and the new language has been incorporated in the naval bill, page 2, lines 5 to 11.

As this bill when enacted into law will not become effective until July 1, 1907, pay officers who have made disbursements prior to that date for commutation of quarters for officers on shore serving with troops will, under the Comptroller's decision, be checked for the sums so paid. To forestall this checkage, the Bureau suggests the insertion of the following language in the naval bill after the word "troops," on page 2, line 11:

"And the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow in the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers all payments made prior to July 1, 1907, for commutation of quarters for officers on shore serving with troops and not provided with public quarters."

It is believed that if the attention of Congress is called to the fact that this slight change in the bill will prevent the enactment of separate legislation for the relief of each pay officer so checked and will lessen the work of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department the a

OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL, Washington, June 25, 1906.

Hon. George Edmund Foss.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: In reply to your communication of June 23, 1906, addressed to the Secretary of War and by him referred to this office for reply, asking for the statute under which quarters are hired for officers serving with troops where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the Government to accommodate them, you are respectfully informed that paragraph 1035, Army Regulations, 1904, provides: "If the public buildings are inadequate, the commanding officer will apply, through the department commander, to the Secretary of War for authority to hire the necessary quarters." This paragraph of the Army Regulations is based upon section 9 of the act of June 17, 1878 (20 Stat. L.,

Very respectfully,

C. F. Humphrey, Quartermaster-General, U. S. Army.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, June 22, 1906.

Washington, June 22, 1906.

Sir: In answer to your informal inquiry of this morning I have the honor to submit the following statement:

By letter dated May 25, 1906, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, the Department recommended the insertion in the then pending naval appropriation bill of the following clause:

"For hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them."

This clause now appears as Senate amendment No. 1 in the naval bill as it passed the Senate and was the subject of discussion yesterday in the House (Congressional Record, June 21, 1906, p. 9159 et seq.).

bill as it passed the Senate and was the subject of discussion yesterday in the House (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 21, 1906, p. 9159 et seq.).

The provision is rendered necessary by recent decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury to the effect that an officer of the Navy on duty with troops is not entitled to commutation for quarters (decision of November 13, 1905, in the case of Asst. Surg. W. N. McDonell, United States Navy, copy inclosed). Under this decision officers, when ordered to shore duty for service with enlisted men at points where there are no quarters available, suffer a special hardship, inasmuch as they receive neither quarters in kind nor commutation therefor. To correct this discrimination is the purpose of Senate "amendment No. 1."

The phraseology of this clause is not new. Prior to the decision of the Comptroller in question, however, such a provision was not needed for the Navy. The language of this "amendment No. 1." appears verbatim in acts making appropriations for the naval service passed as far back as 1890. (See, for example, 33 Stat., p. 349; 26 Stat., p. 204.) This language has, therefore, received interpretation in practice during a period of sixteen years or more, and it has been uniformly interpreted to mean that officers serving with troops, where there are no public quarters or insufficient quarters, shall receive commutation therefor at the rates allowed officers of the Army in like cases—that is to say, at the rate of $12 per room for the number of rooms to which the rank of the officer concerned entitles him. These rates are fixed by law and regulation as follows:

"That the rate of commutation shall hereafter be $12 per room per month for officers' quarters." (21 Stat., 31; act of June 23, 1879; 1 Supp. Rev. Stat., p. 267.)

This statute fixes the rate at $12 per room. By Army Regulations (1904), article 1051, page 152, the number of rooms allowed "as quarters" and "as kitchen" are given as follows:

Lieutenant-General or colonel

Lieutenant-General or major-general____ Brigadier-general or colonel _______ Lieutenant-colonel or major_____ Lieutenant _

By section 13 of the personnel act it is provided that "officers of the line of the Navy and of the medical and pay corps shall receive the same pay and allowances, except forage, as are or may be provided by or in pursuance of law for the officers of corresponding rank in the Army. This statute makes the Army allowances applicable to the Navy, and by other provisions of law they are made applicable to the Marine Corps.

Articles 1035 and 1036 of the Army Regulations (1904) read:

"1035. An officer will not occupy more than his proper allowance of quarters, except by permission of the commanding officer, when there is an excess of quarters at the station. The allowance will be reduced pro rata by the commanding officer when the number of officers and troops present makes it necessary. If the public buildings are in-adequate, the commanding officer will apply, through the department commander, to the Secretary of War for authority to hire necessary quarters.

"1036. Officers on duty without troops at stations where there are public quarters will be furnished them in kind. If insufficient, application for authority to hire quarters will be made as directed in paragraph 1035."

It is learned by informal inquiry at the War Department that it is the practice in that branch of the service to hire quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters or where the public quarters are insufficient.

From the foregoing statement it will be seen that the amendment to which objection has been made, Senate amendment No. 1, is not new, but has been running in the statutes relating to the Marine Corps for sixteen years; that its meaning has been settled and determined in practice; that the language does not confer upon the officers concerned any greater privileges than are enjoyed by officers of the Army in like situation.

Very respectfully,

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY,

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY, Acting Secretary.

Hon. George Edmund Foss, Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If this provision puts the officers of the Navy on the same basis as officers of the Army, so far as I am concerned, I have no desire to press the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Does this provision in any way enlarge what has heretofore been practiced in the Navy Department?

Mr. FOSS. No; it does not-prior to the decision of the Comptroller.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When was this decision made?

Mr. FOSS. I have the decision right here. Mr. MANN. It is a recent decision?

Mr. FOSS. It is a decision that was made a year agolittle over a year ago-and this provision first came to the House in the shape of a Senate amendment last year upon the naval bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I withdraw the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order. The question is on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to the word "thirty-six," in line 17, page 2.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, right in this connection I would like to offer an amendment. Some of the accounts of the naval officers have already been held up for several months, and this will allow a settlement of those accounts.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order should be disposed of first, but

Mr. FOSS. I think I can offer it by unanimous consent. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to an amendment being offered by the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the committee?

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me-Mr. MANN.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. It seems to me it is wiser to pursue the regular

The CHAIRMAN. That amounts to an objection. The question is on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to the word "thirty-six" in line 17, page 2.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, my colleague, whether the law provides for the number of men in the Naval Militia and the Fish Commission; and if so, whether this does not fix the number?

Mr. FOSS. Well, I would say to the gentleman we have no law providing for the number of men in the Navy, only as we fix it each year in the naval appropriation bill.

Is the theory of this to cover the additional Mr. MANN. force of marines?

Mr. FOSS. Oh, no; simply men in the Navy. The Depart-lowed 1,500, and this 36,000 men is giving them the 1,500 in ad-dition to what they already have now, 34,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. I do not think it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order against line 17. The question is on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] to lines 6 to 21, inclusive, on page 3. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Illinois to reserve the point of order.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, in order to hear the discussion, if there is any reason for it, I reserve the point of order and it can be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to speak upon the proposition now.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairnman, I only desire to say a very few words. This is legislation, and of course it is subject to the point of order. The proper way to have dealt with it undoubtedly would have been to have brought in a bill correcting the evil, but there has been an injustice done some very distinguished older officers of the Navy in our legislation in the last few years. When the naval personnel bill was passed all men of civil-war service then on the active list received an additional grade on retirement without any limitation as to rank. In other words, it went from the lowest officer to the highest officer of the Navy. When the Army bill was passed we limited the additional grade to those not above the grade of colonel, so that those who were on the retired list, the brigadier-generals, got no additional grade on account of civil-war service.

We passed a bill for the Army giving an increased pay to We passed a bill for the Army giving an increased pay to all civil-war soldiers on the retired list below the grade of brigadier-general or not above the grade of colonel, the grade of colonel, as you all understand, corresponding in the Army with the grade of captain in the Navy. When the Committee on Naval Affairs reported their bill-I think at the last session of Congress, the chairman can correct me if I am wrong-they gave to the officers of the Navy on the retired list an additional grade where they had had civil-war service. We limited it to those not above the grade of captain. The result was that there are fifteen older officers of the Navy on the retired list who had been retired before the personnel bill was enacted into law. Those men had high rank in the Navy during the civil war, and the anomaly is shown by our legislation that the juniors who had limited service in the civil war, some of them only a few months, some only a few weeks, going to the grade of rear-admiral, senior grade, passed these men who at that time were called commodores, an office that was abolished by the personnel bill, leaving them stationary and at a lower grade on the retired list than the men they commanded during the civil war. In other words, these fifteen men-is that the num-

Mr. FOSS. Fifteen rear-admirals and three commodores.

Mr. HULL. Fifteen rear-admirals and three commodores have been pocketed by the legislation, have received no benefit whatever from the civil-war service, although they had com-mand rank during the civil war. It seems to me that, while this is not the proper place to legislate on that matter, any place is good enough to correct an injustice of that character, and for one I hope the point of order will not be insisted upon.

Mr. PRINCE. I want to ask my colleague on the committee Did not the Military Committee only a day or two ago decline to grant the privilege to eighteen majors and eleven captains who felt that they had been discriminated against on account of this same law?

Mr. HULL. Yes; they did; but I want to say to my friend that, under the construction of the War Department, as I understand it, each one of those officers had received a grade above the one they were serving in for the purpose of retirement or at the date of retirement. Our law, as my colleague will remember, had this provision in it, that any officer who had received a grade for retirement should not have the benefit of the additional grade to civil-war veterans. Now, if those men did not come under that provision the War Department has been guilty of an injustice in their treatment. If it did come under that provision, or if they did come under the provision, then they have already had the grade and have no complaint to make on account of it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reenforce the position of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. In short, this proviso undertakes to put fifteen rear-admirals and three commodores on the retired list upon the same footing-that is, admirals and commodores who were retired before the personnel bill became a law-with rear-admirals and corresponding officers who have been retired under the operation of that law. These fifteen rear-admirals, the youngest of whom is 72 years of age, held commissions in the civil war and performed honorable, distinguished, and faithful service for the Union during that war. They were retired by operation of law prior to the enactment of the personnel bill, and when the personnel bill went into force it increased by about 20 per cent the retired pay of men who held equal rank in the naval service

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I ask the gentleman a question? Mr. CRUMPACKER. So that these fifteen admirals to-day are getting about $1,100 a year less of retired pay than rearadmirals who have been retired under operation of the person-

Mr. MANN. How much do they get? Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know. The same as majorgenerals.

Mr. HULL They get the same as brigadier-generals.

Mr. MANN. How much do they get?

Three-quarters of $5,500 a year. Mr. HULL.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Why make it a rider to this bill? Why not make it a general measure, to be considered on its

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a question of procedure. When the House has an opportunity to do justice to these fifteen rearadmirals who performed distinguished service during the civil war, and who are discriminated against by acts of Congress, I think it ought to avail itself of the opportunity and not quibble over questions of procedure. It is not unusual for acts of Congress to give preferential privileges to men who stood by the Government during the civil war, but this is the first instance that I know of in the legislation of this country where men who performed that service on behalf of the Union are discriminated against. The officers who are retired under the personnel law. very few, if any of them, performed actual service during the civil war. They are receiving, I repeat, 20 per cent more of retired pay than these fifteen veterans to whom the country is under especial obligations. It is simply a question of doing plain, common justice to fifteen or eighteen worthy and deserv ing men, and I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. WALDO. I want to ask the gentleman a question, if he

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield to the gentleman from New

Mr. WALDO. I want to know whether this clause is intended to include any pay for time of service in a military or naval

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No. The proviso to which the point of order is pending begins on line 6 and ends on line 31, and simply relates to rank and retired pay. These officers have been on the retired list now for over seven years

They were retired by operation of law prior to the passage of the personnel bill, and they receive the same pay as brigadiers-general. The personnel law provides that all men, officers of the Navy, who should be retired as rear-admirals in the future should receive the rank and retired pay as majors-general. The personnel bill assimilated the rank, and put rear-admirals upon the same rank and pay as majors-general. It only applied to those in the service and who retired after the act went into effect on the 30th of June, 1899; and the fifteen rear-admirals who were retired before that act went into effect received no benefit whatever from it. They are on the retired list with the rank and pay of brigadiers-general, while a number of other officers of the Navy who have been retired since, under the operation of that law, who performed practically no active service for the Government, are on the retired list with the rank and pay of majors-general.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

Foss] desire to be heard upon the point of order?
Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss this matter, because it has been fully covered, I think, by the speech of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull]. If the gentleman from Illinois insists upon the point of order, I should like to know it now, because I think we could save a great deal of time.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, as near as I get a hold of it, this amendment tries to correct and change what was the law at the time of its passage, namely, these officers retired under the then existing law, and they were satisfied with it. Now, a later day came, and Congress passed another law which seemed to give somebody more benefits than were given under the law at the time these officers retired. Now gentlemen come and say therefore they want us to bring them up to the present If that were done and in the future you should make another change of law, then here is a precedent to bring up all those other men that have been treated otherwise in the past and give them all the benefit of recent legislation.

Now, they want to make fifteen majors-general. The active pay of a major-general is $7,500. The retired pay three-fourths of that. Three-fourths of $7,500, which is $5,625, is a very pleasant amount to come in as retired pay for services rendered. Now, I can not consent to it; and if it should be done, it should be done in some other way. If there was a wrong done, it should have been corrected at the time. I am getting almost weary of doing something all the time to correct some of these retirements and promotions. There are thousands of men all retirements and promotions. over the country to-day who braved the storm of battle who are only receiving $12 a month; and here is a proposition to increase the retired pay of fifteen brigadiers-general on the retired list and make them majors-general, retired, at three-I will take the responsibility of infourths of $7,500 pay. sisting upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The question is on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] on the balance of the section.

Mr. MANN. I insist upon the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. FOSS. No, Mr. Chairman; I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems that it is clearly legislation.
Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire if the part objected to includes that portion of the bill commencing with line 22 on page 3?

The CHAIRMAN. That is right; and down to line 11 on page 4.

Mr. VREELAND. I would ask the gentleman from Illinois to withhold his point of order at least until the reason for placing it in the bill may be given to the House. I think it will commend itself to his judgment upon hearing the reason for it.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to reserve the point of order until the gentleman makes his speech. However, I am not making the point of order in ignorance of the reason for putting it in the bill.

Mr. VREELAND. Perhaps there may be more reasons than the gentleman thinks.

Mr. MANN. Oh, there are some reasons that probably have not been disclosed to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. MANN. At the request of the gentleman, I temporarily reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Very good.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, I recognize, with other gentlemen on the floor, that it would be better to bring these matters before the House in separate bills; but we all know it is practically impossible to secure consideration for them. This bill has been pending before Congress for at least five years. It was first introduced by Representative Dayton during his service, and in the present Congress it was introduced by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER], receiving the unanimous indorsement of the committee, but has not been reached upon the Calendar up to the present time by the House, and it is evident that it can not be reached during the present session. At my request the Naval Committee inserted this item in the appropriation bill, believing that a mere statement of the facts in the case would so commend it to the House that it would receive unanimous consent, as it must.

Mr. Chairman, before the year 1900 retired naval officers could only be ordered into the service in time of war. Only in time of war could the Secretary of the Navy order retired officers returned to the service. In the year 1900 this law was changed for a period of twelve years, during which time the Secretary of the Navy may order any retired officer back into active service, on sea or on shore. By what I believe to be an inadvertence in the law, no provision was made whereby these officers who go back into active service can receive any benefit for the new services which they perform.

I want to give the House two or three examples of the effect of the law as it now stands. We will take the case of Lieutenant Graham, who served twenty years and five months in the active service of the Navy. He was then retired for physical disability. Recovering sufficiently from his disability to per-form service, he was ordered back into the service, and has now been on the active list again for five years and three months, making him a total of more than thirty-two years of active service for his country. Yet under the provisions of the act of 1900 this officer can receive no advancement whatever, although he performs service side by side with those who are receiving advancement for the services they perform. This man is likely to stay in the service until he can see boys graduated down here at the academy since he returned to active service pass him in rank in spite of the more than thirty-two years of service which he has performed.

Take the case of Ensign W. L. Varnum, who served thirteen years and a half, was retired for physical disabilities, went back into the service, being called there by the Secretary of the Navy, and has now served seven years more, making twenty years of active service in the Navy. Yet to-day he retains the rank of ensign, and if he should complete the balance of the twelve years of service he will still retain the rank of ensign. Meanwhile these young boys that are graduated down at the academy pass him and outrank him in the service, despite the twenty years of service which he has put in.

Mr. PRINCE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes.
Mr. PRINCE. Does it not often occur that our colleagues come here, serve with us, and pass us, as in the case of the very able justice of the Supreme Court, Mr. Moody? Can we rectify all these differences and equalities of men and officers by

Mr. VREELAND. We can not rectify all inequalities, but I want to point out to my friend from Illinois that this does not come under the objection that he made to the section of the bill that has just gone out. This does not give an arbitrary raise of pay to men who have retired from the service. merely gives a chance to men who have come back into active service by order of the Secretary of the Navy and perform new service, and we merely give them the common justice of a chance for promotion for the new service which they render.

I will cite one more example. Take the case of a gunner, S. Cross, who served twenty-five years and ten months, being retired for physical disability. He has now come back into the service and has served more than six years, and yet he can see the gunners by the side of him, with far less years of service than he has had, promoted to be chief gunners, while he must spend the balance of his service in the same position.

Now, I want to explain to the House just what this amendment does. Under this present law, the act of 1900, the Secretary of the Navy can order any retired officer back to active service. It is not a matter of discretion with the officer to serve or not, as it is in the Army. He is ordered back into the service. Now, this bill provides that those who are ordered back into the service and who have been retired for physical disability only—the men who voluntarily retired from the service are not affected by this-after having served three years, may then have credit for the years of active service that they had before their retirement. If that is not common justice and fairness to men who are now performing active duties in the service, then I am totally mistaken in the premises.

We know the reason for this law, Mr. Chairman. that it was passed because we have not officers enough in the Navy to man our ships. We know that we have to order these men back into the service because we are not turning out officers at Annapolis fast enough to man the ships which we have built. I have no hesitation in saying that it is not only unjust, but positively mean and niggardly, for Congress to require these men by law to return to active service and then refuse to permit them to advance, but subject them to the humiliation of being passed by their juniors in years and length of service.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that no officer of high grade will be affected by this bill. It is not a permanent change in the law; this act of 1900 limits its provisions to It merely affects those retired for physical disatwelve years. bility and called back into the service by order of the Secretary of the Navy, who are now performing active duty in the service wherever they are sent.

Under these circumstances it did seem to me that a statement of the effect of this provision would commend itself to the judgment of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order. Mr. OLMSTED. I wish the gentleman would withhold his point of order.

Mr. MANN. There are several gentlemen who wish to be heard, but the committee is anxious to proceed. However, I will reserve the point of order if the gentleman from Pennsylvania wishes to address the committee.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words. I happen to be familiar with the case of Mr. Graham, referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND]. son of a distinguished judge, and has many relatives living in His is a most meritorious case. If I mistake not, there has been once or twice a special bill favorably reported to this House covering his particular case. Now there has been reported by the proper committee a bill covering all similar cases, the same provision that is in this bill with reference to these several cases. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that while the rule he invokes is, in the main, a very good rule, with which we are all in sympathy, its object is to prevent vicious legislation which probably could not otherwise be effected than as a rider to an appropriation. This seems to me—and I hope it will seem to him—to be invoking a technical rule, not to prevent an evil, but to prevent a good proposition from becoming law.

There is no doubt that if the general bill which has been reported from the committee could be brought before the House at this time it would pass. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Illinois himself would be very glad to vote for it. That being the case, the measure having been acted upon by the proper committee and favorably reported to the House, and failing to be considered by the House only because it is so far down on the Calendar that it can not be reached at this session, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not feel it his duty to press the point of order in this case. One great object of the rule is to prevent the springing upon the House of entirely new. propositions which have not been considered by the proper committee. It is quite customary to withhold or refrain from making the point of order where the subject-matter of the paragraph has been acted upon by the proper committee, and I ask the gentleman from Illinois not to invoke it against so worthy a provision, which simply does justice to several very worthy officers.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I want to add one or two words to what the gentleman from New York has said, and that is that these men are retired for physical defects incurred in the They are not retired on their own volition. They oppose retirement in almost every case, and are retired by order of the Department because they have some physical defect. If we had a reserve list, as we should have, these men would be continued in the active service, not doing the duty they are not fit to do, but doing the duty which they could do.

Now, there is a vital difference between the method of the operation of the law as it works in the Army and Navy. the Army retired officers are only placed on duty at their own request and with their own consent, and they are only placed on certain stipulated duty, fixed by law; but in the Navy the Department has the option to order any retired officer on duty and to perform any duty which the Department requires him to do. So that these men, who have been retired through no fault of theirs, no matter if they have taken up some active business, wherever they reside, and while engaged in that business, at the option of the Department may be taken from it and ordered on active duty. It therefore works a direct and immediate financial loss in very many cases.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WEEKS. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The active duty to which these men are ordered is not the class of duty that is of special service in the time of war-only active duty in connection with recruiting stations at yards?

Mr. WEEKS. I will say to the gentleman from New York that they are ordered on any duty which the Department sees fit to order them to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But, as a matter of fact, the physical defects are such that they are incapacitated even in time of war, if I am correctly informed, of rendering the service which the average man considers to be active service.

Mr. WEEKS. Generally speaking, that is the case.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I have offered an amendment, which the Clerk has at his desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "troops," in line 11, on page 2, insert the following: "And the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow in the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers all payments made prior to July 1, 1907, for commutation of quarters for officers on shore serving with troops and not provided with public quarters."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman mean prior to that time or subsequent to that time?

Mr. FOSS. Prior to that time. Mr. FITZGERALD. How far back would that go?

Mr. MANN. To the beginning of the Government. Mr. FOSS. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I think it would.

Mr. FOSS. Back to the date of the decision of the Comptroller.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the amendment should so state. Mr. MANN. Here is a direction on the Comptroller to allow all accounts at any time in reference to officers' quarters.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I wish the Clerk would again report the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment. There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the

That would cover all claims for officers' quarters prior to next July, no matter where they occurred or for what reason they had been allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois now make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss].

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I want to state there has been no question as to the commutation of quarters up to the time of the Comptroller's decision, which was on November 15, 1905, and since that time these accounts have been held up. If the gentleman desires to insert "prior to June 30, 1907, and after November 15, 1905," I have no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman ought to have his amendation.

Mr. FOSS. This amendment was prepared by the Department and affects only these accounts which have been held up by the Comptroller's decision.

Mr. MANN. It affects all accounts prior to July 1, 1907, for officers' quarters, no matter whether they have been authorized by law or not. Under this they could allow anything they

Mr. ROBERTS. Prior to 1905 they were not held up at all;

they were paid.

Mr. MANN. That is not the amendment. I have no objection to providing an amendment in accordance with the language of the bill in some way.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

I do in its present shape. Mr. MANN.

The CHAIRMAN. Wherein does the gentleman claim the amendment is out of order?

Mr. MANN. It is a change of law absolutely. It is directing that accounting officers shall allow certain accounts which are not now allowed by law. It is a specific direction, the law now providing that accounts shall be allowed by the accounting officers for disbursements for officers' quarters. Here is an amendment directing the accounting officers to allow all disbursements for officers' quarters, though it may be directly in the teeth of the law fixing the allowance.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

Foss] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FOSS. I do not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the point of order is well taken, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 22, insert:
"The grade of the active list of the Navy hereinafter designated shall be so increased that there shall be sixteen additional chaplains."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is clearly subject to the point of order, but I sincerely hope, since the bill carries so much legislation, the chairman will permit the committee to consider the matter, most particularly as on February 19, 1903, when a similar amendment was offered by me, members of the committee assured me that the bill I had introduced for this purpose would be considered and reported, and no action has yet been taken upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made by the gentleman from Illinois, and sustained.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two paragraphs, both having gone out on the point of order. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the privilege of the House, and I hope, if my request receives the indorsement of the chairman of the committee, to be permitted to continue for fifteen minutes

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, it is a curious coincidence that usually as we approach the consideration of the naval bill there is a revival of war talk. Our enemies appear in increasing numbers and with a more threatening aspect just as there mention this as cause and effect, but I do think it suggestive.

Although we are at peace "with all the world and the rest of mankind," as a President of the United States is reported to have said, the air is thick with rumors of war. Senators of the United States see storm clouds in the Fast and parimeters. United States see storm clouds in the East and peripatetic preachers of unlimited naval construction are declaring in public addresses that a conflict with Japan is inevitable. Some of our friends who represent the Pacific coast on the floor of this House are frightened almost into a state of nervous collapse over the vision of little brown men marching under the banner of the "rising sun." The fact that 6,000 miles of salt water lie between them and the islands of Japan does not appear to allay their fears. They are not even reassured by the recollection of the fact that the President of the United States has recently been honored with the Nobel prize as the world's chief champion of peace. If this official selection of the President as the world's most conspicuous exemplar of the doctrine of love and peace—and no one has yet openly suggested that it is a misfit—can not calm their fears, it is useless, I suppose, for me to undertake to say anything with the hope that it will reassure them. Still, as one who can not appreciate the imminence of this danger, as one who can not persuade himself that there are certain physical and financial obstacles which even the Japanese, brave, physical and mancial obstacles which even the Japanese, brave, clever, and resourceful as they are, can not overcome, I shall contribute my mite toward restoring their peace of mind.

Mr. Chairman, the war between Japan and Russia was one of the most remarkable in the history of the world. A nation of only about 40,000,000 people, recently emerged from what we are pleased to call "barbarism," met and overcame on the field of battle one of the great military powers of Europe. markable series of battles, always ending in victory for the Japanese, and the result of the war are striking illustrations of what discipline and intelligent preparation will accomplish. The Russians outnumbered the Japanese about three to one; they had better credit; their march into Asia had been for years an uninterrupted series of victories; they held their enemy in contempt, and this may have had something to do with their defeat, but the end was humiliation to the Czar and his armies.

However, it must not be forgotten that the theater of war was several thousand miles away from the Russian base of supplies. Not only the army of Russia but all the provisions of war had to be carried this great distance over two little, slender threads of steel, and in this fact alone lay an advantage for the Japanese which quite balanced the disparity in

I call upon my nervous fellow-citizens of the Pacific coast to remember that although the Japanese could march across Korea and through Manchuria, their legs are entirely too short to wade the Pacific. On our side of the Pacific Ocean they have no coaling stations, and ships of war which cross that ocean under their own steam would be comparatively helpless before they could reach the coast of California. Again—and the recollection of this may help our California friends to a night's rest-it should also be remembered that after winning brilliant victories in the greatest battles of all history the Japanese made a treaty of peace, which, if not humiliating, was at least a confession of weakness. No man can believe that the Japanese would have yielded what they did yield at Portsmouth if they had not been physically and financially exhausted. They may have recovered from their physical exhaustion, but it is certain that they have neither paid their debts nor filled their war chests since the summer of 1905. The statesmen of Japan, who seem to measure up in capacity to those of any other nation, know that a bankrupt country can not wage war successfully against a wealthy one, particularly under the circumstances which surround this country and theirs. The poverty of Japan and the wealth of the United States both speak for peace.

It has been suggested by a gentleman who ought to know better that in a crisis of this sort Japan would be used as the tool of England and made the agency of Great Britain for wreaking vengeance on the United States to satisfy an enmity which is not explained and for purposes that no man can fathom. The suggestion is absurd and unwarranted by any facts of current or recent history.

I do not believe that there has been a day in the last ten years when any Government of Great Britain, Conservative or Liberal, would not gladly have entered into a treaty of arbitra-tion with this country. That England would prefer not to tion with this country. That England would prefer not to share the trade of the East with us goes without saying. But the English people are clever traders and they would never throw away a great business for a small one, nor would they be so stupid as to shut out our grain and cotton from their own country in order to preserve a trade which is of less importance to them, less vital to them, in fact. The tables of our com-merce with Great Britain, if carefully studied, should, it seems to me, satisfy any man not besotted with the lust for war that there is absolutely no danger of any trouble between that country and the United States. Then there is a higher plane upon which our relations with Great Britain might be considered. Blood is thicker than water. We speak the same language, hold the same traditions, and have inherited the same love of liberty that has been a conspicuous quality of the British since the barons had their trouble with King John. They are our kinsmen, bone of our bone, and in dealing with other races this is bound to have its influence. Although we may have our periods of irritation, although on two occasions we have actually come to blows with the English, no man can convince me that the great mass of Englishmen or any English government which derives its powers from the people will ever so actively sympathize with those of another race as to lead them to commit political and commercial suicide, both of which would be made almost certain by a war with the United States. This talk of war is ridiculous and wicked. Whether it is more stupid than sinful or more sinful than stupid I can not say. believe it is the maximum of both.

Arbitration is an honorable, reasonable, and inexpensive way of maintaining peace. It is more in harmony with the platform of the Galilean and more consistent with modern civilization than the "big stick" or "big navy" plan which proposes to keep the peace by developing a power so great that it may crush the life out of opposition. Although it seems a long time coming, I still indulge the hope that the Christian and peaceloving people of this country will some time compel their own Government to write treaties of arbitration with all the other Governments of the world that are willing to enter into them. If I could have my way I would begin by making treaties with the smaller and weaker nations of the American Continent. I would then move steadily forward in the great work until finally the powerful nations of the earth, made ashamed by the noble example that the smaller nations had set them, would gladly seek the advantage of these covenants that are based on the Golden Rule.

I have never been able to appreciate the force of the argument that peace is best preserved by unusual preparation for war. Bringing that argument down to the range of personal observation I would suggest that the man who carries arms is the individual most apt to have personal difficulties. Nations, which are but aggregated individuals, are governed by the same impulses and follow the same lines of reason, or unreason, as it is more ant to be.

The greed of nations, which is best controlled by treaties of arbitration, is what causes all the trouble. If the strong nations did not lust after the soil and sovereignty of the weaker there would be fewer wars. If we were not debauched by the same lust for other people's goods and government we would have fewer troubles of our own than we have had for the last ten years.

Nothing so marks the growth of the imperial idea in our country as the development of the Navy. All thoughtful and patriotic Americans admit that we need a good defensive Navy, but that is as far as they go. They are beginning to be awakened to the fact that we have gone far beyond their conservative views, and the end is not in sight. We have finally gone into competition with the greatest naval power on earth, and it is no uncommon thing to hear Americans say that we must not stop until we have a Navy equal to if not greater than that of England. To balance England's great war ship, the Dreadnought, we are urged to lay down two upon even more powerful lines. Where he got his figure of speech I do not know, but a distinguished clergyman said to me the other day that he detested the poker-playing suggestion that in the matter of building war ships we should always "go one better."

A year ago when this bill was being considered I asked the

A year ago when this bill was being considered I asked the attention of the House to a comparison of our naval budget then and what it was in the last year of Mr. Cleveland's Administration. That comparison may still be studied with advantage, but it must be distressing to the thoughtful and patriotic American to whom I have referred.

The Navy is not for defense. Strictly speaking it is an offensive weapon. The integrity of our territory is secured by the coast defenses erected at an ultimate cost of nearly $200,000,000 and in the stout hearts of the $0,000,000 Americans behind them. Perhaps I am to a degree wrong in that statement, for the Navy may be considered necessary for the defense of certain outlying and outlandish islands. But, Mr. Chairman, when the outlanders don't want our defense, or our sovereignty, it would seem that we are really paying too high a price for the privilege of thrusting the benefits of our political system on an unwilling pecule.

I do not suppose that any moderately well-informed man will deny the proposition that if we did not have the Philippines on our hands our naval expenses could be cut half in two and our military budget greatly reduced. There are very few men of even the most moderate information, no matter what their political faith may be, who are not ready to admit that the monumental blunder of our history was the annexation of those islands. We have dissipated our strength in assuming the burden of their defense. We have repudiated cherished principles by compelling them to accept a government which they do not want. We have complicated our vexatious race problem by making them our wards, and we are increasing the burden of our own taxes because we do not seem to have sense enough to get rid of an expensive nuisance.

My friend Champ Clark of Missouri, who has the habit of My friend Champ Clark of Missouri, who has the habit of forceful and interesting speech, hammered some wholesome truths over, if not into, the heads of Members the other day when he said that while we wanted more land and were trying to get it by draining swamps and watering the plains, we did not want the Philippines, because our children would never live there. The history of our people will show that he is absolutely right in that statement. Our race has usually recoiled from the Tropics, and when it has ventured in that direction the experiment has ended in disaster. The prolonged residence of white men in the Tropics has usually ended in physical and moral degeneracy. Sometimes they have adjusted themselves to the environment and debased themselves by a race merger with the natives, and the result has always been a mongrel who has done nothing worth remembering and who is capable of nothing worth doing.

After nearly four hundred years of efforts at colonization the number of people of European stock in tropical countries is a negligible quantity. The Philippines were occupied by the Portuguese and Spaniards before the English settled at Jamestown and Plymouth Rock. Nothing ever seriously impeded the development of the colonies of Plymouth and Jamestown. They grew in spite of all obstacles. Neither the hostility of the savages, who beset both these plantations, nor the occasionally desperate state of their fortunes could prevent the coming of other colonists or their growth into great and liberty-loving States. But the favor of kings and the nurturing care of the church was not equal to the task of making an important state out of the Philippines, and when the Americans landed at Manila, three hundred and seventy-seven years after their discovery by Magellan, the natives were still mostly naked savages, who were being ruled and robbed by a handful of Spaniards.

No wonder Mr. Clark says that American children will not go there. They instinctively know that their destiny lies in the Temperate Zone. Under these circumstances what incredible folly it is for us to go on squandering millions of the money of the American taxpayer to build a great Navy to hold islands which we do not want and can not inhabit if we wanted to.

We have wasted enough money already in the scheme of Asiatic colonization to deepen all the harbors and improve all the rivers in the United States. And what have we gotten for it? The bayonet-enforced right to govern some colored people on the other side of the earth, who never heard of us until they saw the muzzles of our guns and who, if they survive a thousand centuries, will, no doubt, always associate us with schemes of reconcentration and heroic feats of arms like that at Mount

We have acquired a footing in the Asiatic storm center. We have provoked the jealousy of Europe and excited the dread of We have secured conditions out of which we may reasonably expect wars enough to keep our swords from rusting in their scabbards. These are so far the net results of our maneuvering on the China seas.

FORTIFYING THE PHILIPPINES.

It is now proposed to extend our coast defense project to the Philippines. This is a plan that was gotten up to protect American homes against assault from the outside. When completed it will cost nearly $260,000,000. It is a large tax on the public treasury, but a burden which our people cheerfully bear. I do not believe that they will patiently submit to its extension to the Philippine Islands.

The number of guns proposed for these defenses, with the estimated cost of the guns, carriages, and emplacements, submarine mines, etc., is as follows:

Proposed armament.—Manila: Eight 12-inch mortars, eight 14-inch, four 12-inch, two 10-inch, four 6-inch, and fourteen 3-inch guns. Subig Bay: Eight 12-inch mortars, four 12-inch, three 10-inch, and twelve 3-inch guns.

Estimated cost of armament, etc.

These figures indicate, Mr. Chairman, that it is proposed to These figures indicate, Mr. Chairman, that it is proposed to spend $8,417,018 more for defensive works at the two places of Manila and Subig Bay than have already been spent. The estimates do not include the cost of eight 12-inch guns to be mounted at Manila and in Subig Bay, as these guns have already been manufactured from funds heretofore appropriated. The emplacements for six of these 12-inch guns and for four mortars have also been constructed from funds previously appropriated.

There are other points on the islands which, our military advisers think should be fortified, if we are to retain them. Iloilo and Cebu will call for as many millions, perhaps, as Manila and Subig Bay, and for a corresponding increase in the personnel of the Coast Artillery.

Very few harbors in the United States will have as costly deference as Manila. Colvector for accounts which had a costly deference on Manila.

defenses as Manila. Galveston, for example, which had an outgoing trade in the last six months of 1906 twice as great as the import and export trade of all the Philippine Islands for the entire fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, will be defended by one-third the coast artillerymen required at Manila and Subig Bay and for less than one-third the cost.

Then, after all, there are military experts who do not believe that the islands can be put in a state of defense for any sum of money which will not be prohibitive.

Shall we persevere in this political folly and extravagance? I believe that when the American voter once has his conscience and judgment aroused he will command the abandonment of this strange and un-American policy of meddling with the affairs of Asia.

I have argued this question altogether from the point of view of the Americans and their interests. Now, with the permission of the House, I shall print an article which not only graphically describes political conditions in the islands, but also undertakes to give the view of the Filipinos. It is not unreasonable to ask that they be considered in the settlement of their affairs.

The article is as follows:

[North American Review, January 18, 1907.]

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE-WHEN?

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE—WHEN?

[By James H. Blount, late judge of the court of first instance of the Philippine Islands.]

After seven years spent at the "storm center" of "expansion," the first of the seven as a volunteer officer in Cuba, the next two in a like capacity in the Philippines, and the remainder in the last-named country as United States judge, the writer was finally invalided home last spring, sustained in spirit at parting by cordial farewells, oral and written, personal and official. Having now been invited by the editor of the Review to prepare an article embodying his views as to our Philippine problem, he naturally enters upon a discussion of the subject with some degree of diffidence, because it involves calling in question the wisdom and righteousness of a policy inaugurated and carried out by a small group of distinguished men, under whom he shared in this nation's work beyond seas for a very considerable fraction of the average duration of life. However, he can truly say to all former fellow-workers:

"I have eaten your bread and salt,
I have drunk your water and wine,
The deaths ye died I have watched beside
And the lives that ye led were mine.

"Was there aught that I did not share In vigil or toll or ease, One joy or woe that I did not know, Dear friends across the seas?"

"Was there aught that i did not share
In vigil or toll or east."

In Charles Dickens's nevel, Bleak House, there is a chapter entitled "Telescopic philaintropy." wherein is introduced the famous Mrs. Jeljby, the mother of a large and interesting family, "a lady of very remarkable strength of character, who devotes herself entirely to the public," who "has devoted herself to an extensive variety of public subjects at various times and is at present devoted to the subject of Africa, with a general view to the cultivation of the coffee berry and inspect of her own children, the latter continually getting into all times of mischlef while her attention is diverted from home. Seeing that the original proposes to continue its policy of "benevolent assimilation" in the remote Philippines indefinitely, at whatever cost, the analogy between its attitude and Mrs. Jellyby's misplaced philanger," is by no means remote.

Mr. Bryan maintains, substantially (see his newspaper, the Commoner, of April 27 and May 4, 1906):

(1) That the Filipinos want independence.

(2) That if protected from the great land-acquiring powers, "so fast the subject to any allen government."

(3) That we should at once disclaim any intention of exercising permanent sovereignty over the archipelago and declare it to be our purpose to remain only long enough to see a stable government started, and then leave them to work out their own destiny.

Senator Dusors, of Idaho, who was a member of the Congressional party referred to, has since said in the New York Independent:

Senator Dusors, of Iwah, who was a member of the Congressional party referred to, has since said in the New York Independent.

Senator New Axors, of Nevada, also a member of the Congressional party referred to, has since said in the New York Independent.

There is no question that all the Filipino parties are now in favor of independence.

"There is nobody in the islands, no organization of any kind or description, which favors the population of the islands to some party referred to, ha hamlets), has the same kind of stores and similarly dressed people as a Christian manicipality of the island of Mindamac."

Ing a comparison between itself and the schedules of the Twelfth Census of the United States:

"Those of the Philippine Census are somewhat simpler, the differences being due mining by the more homogeneous character of the population of the company of the more homogeneous character of the population of the company o they ought to have independence." (Speech at Cincinnati, February 22, 1904.)

The imputation of selfishness put by this statement upon all Filipinos who desire independence is uncalled for. "The gentlemen that are looking for office under an independent government" could undoubtedly get office under the present government if they would only stop wanting independence. And "if you permit their independence and make it a definite promise," you will have no agitation to hasten the day, provided the promise itself fix the day. During nearly four years of service on the bench in the Philippines, the writer heard as much genuine, impassioned, and effective eloquence from Filipino lawyers, saw exhibited in the trial of causes as much industrious preparation, and zealous, loyal advocacy of the rights of clients as any ordinary nisi prius judge at home is likely to meet with in the same length of time. Some of these lawyers are ex-officers of the insurgent army. Each of them has his clients and is the center of a circle of influence. All of them, without exception, want independence. Of course the law of self-preservation precludes them from proclaiming this from the house tops, especially if they are holding office under the Government. But in their heart of hearts the dearest hope that each of them cherishes is that he may live to see the star of the Philippine republic risen in the Far East. Let a date be fixed by the United States Congress for turning over the government of the archipelago to its people, a date which will afford to the great majority of the present generation a reasonable expectation of living to see the independence of their country, and all political unrest, including most of the brigandage in the islands, will at once cease. The news will spread "like wildfire," to borrow a famous phrase of our sunshiny Secretary of War. We shall have exchanged a balking horse for a willing one. The sullen submission of a conquered people will give place to genuine and universal gratitude toward America. The unborn national life will leap for joy in the womb of time. Te Deums will be celebrated in every church of every town in the archipelago from Aparri to Zamboanga. Aglipay himself may even say: "Now, Lord, let my schism depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen Thy salvation."

The great ocean steamship companies of the world publish the sailing dates of their vessels a year ahead. Everything else hinges upon this point of departure. All preparations, whether by crew, shippers, or prospective passengers, are shaped to that end. Why can not the same be done in the matter of the launching of a ship of state? If three strong and able men, familiar with insular conditions and still young enough to undertake the task—say, for instance, Gen. Leonard Wood, of the Army; Judge Adam C. Carson, of the Philippine supreme court, and W. Morgan Shuster, collector of customs of the archipelago, or three other men of like caliber—were told by a President of the United States, by authority of the Congress, "Go out there and set up a respectable native government in ten years, and then come away," they could and would do it, and that government would be a success, and one of the greatest moral victories in the annals of free government would have been written by the gentlemen concerned upon the pages of their country's history.

To understand the causes of the present discontent and how incurable it is except by a promise of independence at a fixed date, let me review this tragedy of errors which we have written in blood and selfish legislation in that unhappy land, as rapidly as may be consistent with clearness and commensurate with the ability of an inconsistent with clearness and commensurate with the ability of an inconsistent w otis had us evacuate this place and fall back. We have just had to take it again." The Schurman Commission hoped that the Filipinos could be persuaded to give up their idea of independence. The Army knew better.

In the first half of 1899 General Otis inexcusably postponed recommending to President McKinley the call for Federal volunteers. He did not really understand the seriousness of the situation. He conducted the campaign all the time he was there from a desk in Manila, and never once took the field.

The Volunteer Army of 1899 was to last, under the act of Congress, for two years only—that is, until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901. The insurrection had to be over at that time, whether or no. To use an expression of the theatrical managers, that date was to be "positively its last appearance." The volunteers began their work in the fall of 1899, twenty-five regiments of them, and, shoulder to shoulder with the regulars, pegged away cheerfully at the war, doing their country's work: and they had been vigorously convincing the Filipinos of the benevolence of our intentions for about nine months when the idea of a second Philippine Commission, a second olive branch, was conceived at Washington. The Presidential election was to occur in the following November, and men high in the councils of the Republican narry at home believed that the success of the party would be seriously imperiled if the situation did not soon clear up, or at least improve, in the Philippines. The public press of that period contains interviews with such men of the tenor indicated. In this state of the case the Tatt Commission was sent out. Things looked dismal. Philippine stock was going down. Optimism was devoutly to be wished. Judge Taft did not disappoint his friends at home. He was not then a judge. He was a partisan of the Republican party, an advocate. And, like many another able advocate, he persuaded himself that the witnesses whose testimony militated against his client's interest were, if not mendaclous, at l expressed in General MacArthur's annual report to the Secretary of War:

"* * The people seem to be actuated by the idea that in all doubtful matters of polities or war, men are never nearer right than when going with their own kith and kin. * * " " " Alusion is then made to the "aimost complete unity of action of the entire native population. That such unity is a fact is too obvious to admit of discussion." Then follows this humorous thrust:

"* * The adhesive principle comes from ethnological homogeneity, which induces men to respond for a time to the appeals of consanguineous leadership."

If the volunteers whose term of enlistment was scheduled to expire with the fiscal year, June 30, 1901, should have to be replaced by anything like an equal number of other troops, a call for further appropriations to conduct a long-drawn-out and unpopular war would surely try the patience of the American people and endanger the ultimate fortunes of the Republican party. Everything had to be shaped to avoid such a catastrophe. Whether the country should be ready for civil government on that date or not, it had to be. When Joel Chandler Harris's creation, "Uncle Remus," tells his little friend the story of Brev

Rabbit's climbing the tree to elude the dogs, and the lad interrupts: "But, Uncle Remus, a rabbit can't climb a tree," the resourceful narrator very promptly replies: "Oh, but, honey, dis rabbit des 'bleeged ter climb dis tree." The Administration was "bleeged" to climb the tree of civil government. Civil government was therefore duly inaugurated on July 4, 1901.

Within less than six months thereafter the flames of insurrection broke out anew in Batangas and the adjacent provinces, and it became necessary to give the military a free hand. General J. Franklin Bell accordingly invaded Batangas and the region round about with an ample force, a brigade, and proceeded to wage war—the sort of war General Sherman described, only more so, for General Sherman did not practice reconcentration. General Bell went there to make those people "long for peace." And he did make them "long for peace," or, to use his own language, "want peace and want it badly." General Bell is not to be blamed for this. He is a brave and skillful soldier, one of the best in our own or any other army. He was simply doing his duty, obedient to orders. This Batangas insurrection of 1901–2 would never have occurred had not Governor Taft persisted in belleving that the Fliipinos could be genulnely satisfied with something less than independence. This error led him to reduce, most imprudently, the army of occupation and the number of Army posts, against military advice, thereby giving the insurrection a chance to get its second wind. If the army of occupation had not been so reduced, reconcentration would never have been necessary in Batangas or elsewhere. Reconcentration tactics are born of numerical weakness. If you have troops enough thoroughly to police a given territory, no need for reconcentration will arise there. Reconcentration is an admission that you are not able constantly to provide protection for all the people. As a corollary of the fundamental mistake indicated, a constabulary force was organized, which, it was believed, could control rienced civilians and unfriendly constantiaty to sharp, like.

Caring for the peaceably inclined people, or pacificos, as they were called in Cuba—those who upon being told to do so voluntarily come within the zone or radius prescribed in the order for reconcentration—is not the only problem which can be competently handled by the military alone. There are the prisoners brought in by the policing force, from time to time, because found outside the prescribed radius, and put in the provincial jail. An ordinary jail, with 400 to 800 people crowded into it within a short period of time, can not be properly handled by inexperienced hands. The sanitary conditions are sure to become bad and foul, and more or less disease and death is certain to ensue.

handled by inexperienced hands. The sanitary conditions are sure to become bad and foul, and more or less disease and death is certain to ensue.

In the latter part of 1903, about the middle of November, the writer was sent to hold court in the province of Albay, where quite a formidable insurrection had been in progress for about a year without suspension of civil government. There had been as many as 1,500 men in the field on each side at times. Reconcentration under the law quoted had been resorted to. There had been as many as 700 or 800 prisoners in the provincial jail at one time, so he was told. Toward the close of the term, just after Christmas, when most of the docket had been disposed of, and there was time for matters more or less perfunctory in their nature, the prosecuting attorney brought in rough drafts of two proposed orders for the court to sign. One was headed with a list of fifty-seven names, the other with a list of sixty-three names. Both orders recited that the foregoing persons had died in the fail—all but one between May 20 and December 3, 1903 (roughly six and one-half months), as will appear from an examination of the dates of death—and concluded by directing that the indictments against them be quashed. The writer was only holding an extraordinary term of court there, and was about to leave the province. The regular judge of the district was scheduled soon to arrive. He did not sign the proposed orders, therefore, but kept them as legal curios. A correct translation of one of them appears below, followed by the list of names which headed the other (identical) order:

Space does not remain sufficient to do more than briefly suggest how true this is also of the Washington end of the line.

For the benefit of American cotton manufacturers, cheap English textiles, previously worn by and satisfactory to millions of poor natives, have been shut out of the Philippines by a practically prohibitive import duty, a surtax of 100 per cent imposed by the United States Congress. (Act of Feb. 25, 1906.)

For the benefit of American shipping interests, the Philippines have been treated by our maritime legislation as part of the United States by extension of the coastwies shipping laws to the archipelago.

For the benefit of American sugar and tobacco interests, the Philippines have been treated by our tariff legislation as foreign territory. Those interests defeated the effort to give to the islands the benefit of a reduction of the duty on Philippine products to 25 per cent of the Dingley tariff, their representative insisting before the Committee on Ways and Means, almost in the language of Mrs. Jellyby's critics, "I believe our own children have more claim upon us." The leading Filipinos perceive, as clearly as we Americans do, that in the nature of things this sort of argument will always be an obstacle in the path of their progress so long as human nature retains a modicum of selfishness.

The instinct, of self-preservation of our own sugar and tobacco producers would surely be satisfied with and lend their support to a free-trade, or at least a lower tariff, measure between this country and the Philippines, if the same were coupled with a promise of independence within a decade. This seems to be the only solution that is at once righteous and practicable. It is the only lever that will lift the Philippine ship of state upon the ways, and launch her successfully upon the voyage of national life.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recruiting: Expenses of recruiting for the naval service; rent of rendezvous and expenses of maintaining the same; advertising for and obtaining men and apprentice seamen; actual and necessary expenses in lieu of mileage to officers on duty with traveling recruiting parties, $121.340: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in recruiting seamen, ordinary seamen, or apprentice seamen, unless a certificate of birth or written evidence, other than his own statement, satisfactory to the recruiting officer, showing the applicant to be of age required by naval regulations, shall be presented with the application for enlistment.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7. line 3, after the word "statement," strike out the comma and insert the words "or statement of another based thereon."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, a year ago this provision which has been just read was, after considerable debate, in-serted in the bill of that year and has been repeated in the present bill. It has, however, sir, utterly failed to carry out the desires of the House. At that time the purpose of the House in voting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Keliher] was to provide that boys 14, 15, and 16 years of age should not be enlisted solely on their own statement of their age; that they should, in the absence of their parents' consent, provide a certificate of birth or written evidence other than their own statement satisfactory to the recruiting officer. During the past year I have had several cases called to my attention, of one of which I will speak. A boy runs away from home, goes to a recruiting station, and tells the recruiting officer he is 18 years of age when he is only 16. The recruiting officer then says, "Go right around the corner to Mr. So-and-so and make your statement to him." He goes around the corner, comes back within two hours with a sworn statement from the person to whom he is sent by the recruiting officer that he has been appointed guardian of the boy, and havoncer that he has been appointed guardian of the boy, and having made diligent inquiry is satisfied that the boy was born at such and such a time. The instance which I have in mind is one which occurred in the city of New York. A boy in my State ran away from a good home, from parents who were amply able and willing to care for him. He was then 16 years of age. He ran away, to the great distress of his parents, to New York. He went to the recruiting officer, and I have here a copy from the Navy Department of the captain's letter to the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, which states the case as

NAVAL RECRUITING STATION,
87 South Street, New York, December 7, 1996.
Sir: I have to acknowledge the receipt of instructions from the Chief of Bureau to make a detailed report of all the facts connected with the enlistment of Abraham Bander at this station on August 28, 1906.
Bander presented bloods

Bander presented himself at the station for enlistment on August 28; he was questioned by me personally as to his age, parentage, etc.; then he was required to write out a formal application for enlistment. As he claimed to have no parents or guardian. I sent him to Mr. Herbert Van Dyke to secure a sworn certificate of his age; on his return to the office with this certificate, he was sworn in and sent to the training station at Newport.

I inclose the written application of this boy, in which he states that he was born on April 3, 1888; I also inclose the sworn certificate which he brought from Mr. Van Dyke.

I very much regret the frequent occurrence of such cases at this station. Every pre-caution is taken to prevent illegal enlistments, and candidates are strictly examined by the recruiting officer before their applications are considered. If they will falsify as to their age and parentage and it they pass the required physical examination, I can not refuse to accept them. If at any time the appearance of the boy leads the doctor or recruiting officer to doubt the authenticity of his age statement, the candidate is promptly rejected.

Very respectfully,

Captain, United States Navy, and Recruiting Officer.

The Chief of Bureau of Navigation.

The Chief of Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department.

Mr. FOSS. May I interrupt the gentleman? Mr. GRANGER. Certainly. Mr. FOSS. Whose statement did the gentleman take—the Mr. GRANGER. I take the statement of this letter from the captain, which was furnished me from the Navy Department. Mr. FOSS. Do I understand he makes the statement that the recruiting officer sent this boy to somebody to make a false statement?

Mr. GRANGER. He says that, "as he claimed to have no parents or guardian, I sent him to Mr. Herbert Van Dyke to secure a sworn certificate of his age."

That is the statement. On his return to the office with this certificate he was sworn in. Mr. Herbert Van Dyke, to whom he was sent, makes this sworn statement:

STATE OF NEW YORK, CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK, 88:

Herbert Van Dyke, being duly sworn, says: That he is the guardian of Abraham Bander, who has applied for enlistment as apprentice seaman in the United States Navy; that he, deponent, has made diligent investigation as to the nativity of said Bander, and is satisfied that he was born on the 3d day of April, 1888, at Providence, R. I., U. S. A.

HERBERT VAN DYKE.

[SEAL.] GEORGE A. MINASIAN,
Notary Public, Kings County.

Certificate filed in New York County.

It was the same day that Captain Stuart says he sent him to Herbert Van Dyke. I wrote to Herbert Van Dyke and asked him to kindly tell me of what his "diligent investigation" consisted, and what evidence he had other than the word of the boy himself as to his age and his birthplace. He never replied to my letter, and, my letter having never been returned to me, I have every reason to suppose he received it. I am informed by the Navy Department that Mr. Van Dyke is in the business of acting as guardian for runaway boys; that he takes them as he did this boy

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed five minutes more.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRANGER. According to the statement of the Department, Mr. Van Dyke takes these boys and goes to the surrogate court and becomes their guardian. I have no doubt that he is philanthropic man, one of those professional philanthropists who do a great deal of good in the world, but he does not stop to think that he helps to break up homes or that he brings trouble and sorrow, as he did in this case, into a good home, where he allowed a boy of 16 years of age to hoodwink the Government and go into the Government service at a time when he should not have been allowed there.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offered is a very simple one. If this clause is to be kept in the bill at all, it should be made effective. The words which I offer are simply as to the evidence other than his own statement-that is, the statement of the person who is about to be enlisted or statement of another based thereon—that is, that the "other evidence" shall not be based upon the statement of the person who desires to enlist. Under the present condition of things the boy makes the same statement, which is not sufficient to allow him to be enlisted by making it to the recruiting officer, but he makes it to somebody else, say, to Mr. A., and then Mr. A. makes an affidavit that he has made that statement, and then the boy comes back and gets around the law. It is merely enlisting the boy under his own statement. All along the Atlantic seacoast, and within the range of the Atlantic seacoast, where boys are attracted at the age of 14, 15, and 16 by the circulars and advertisements that are put up by the Navy Department, boys are being continually taken away from home. And I say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not believe that it is necessary that the United States should undertake to fill its Navy by offering inducements to. or by encouraging the running away of, 15 and 16 year old boys from their homes to enter the Navy. I believe we should offer sufficient inducements in order that men who have reached the age of 21 should enlist, or else we should keep out boys unless they bring satisfactory evidence. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] wish to discuss the point of order? I ask this, because I wish to speak on that if he intends to press it.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I do not press the point of order, but I object to the amendment. Last year we inserted a provision that the applicant desiring enlistment shall furnish a certificate of birth or written evidence, other than his own statement, satisfactory to the recruiting officer.

I may say that that provision, which we recommend in the appropriation bill this year, was inserted last year by the House, and the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation says it has worked to great disadvantage in enlisting men for the Navy. In the Army, I am informed, there is no requirement for any certificate of birth or any other evidence. In the enlistment in the Marine Corps there is no requirement for certificate of birth or any other evidence. But a boy goes to the recruiting officer of the Navy and he must furnish a certificate of birth or written evidence, other than his own statement, satisfactory to the recruiting officer. Not so with the Army or Marine Corps. Now, the gentleman's provision has, further, a greater requirement. It often occurs, for instance, that a boy goes to a naval recruiting office and can not furnish the certificate of birth, but he goes right over to an Army recruiting office or Marine Corps recruiting office and is enlisted.

Now, I will say, Mr. Chairman, that we are behind on enlistments. It is very difficult to obtain this certificate of birth. It has only been in recent years that some municipalities have provided an office where the certificates of birth are registered. It is, I may say, during the last ten years in some municipalities and communities this has been provided; and it is very difficult to secure these certificates. It seems to me that we ought not to make it any harder than it is at the present time for boys to get into the Navy who desire to get in. I hope this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois forgets that there has not been the same difficulty about enlisting boys in the Army that there has been about enlistments in the Navy. The naval service, before boys get into it, is very attractive; after they are in the service it is not so attractive. The result has been in the past that a great many boys have run away from their homes, misstated their age, and after getting into the service there has been considerable diffi-culty to get them out. This provision was put in the bill last year to compel boys to procure either a written certificate of birth or some other written evidence that they had attained the age necessary to permit them to enlist. The gentleman from Illinois expresses the hope that no further difficulty will be placed in the way of these boys entering the service. that every possible difficulty will be placed in the way of permitting a minor to enlist in the service without the permission of his parents or his guardian. What is the effect when a boy does so enlist? If the parent applies to the Department to have the boy discharged, notice is given that if he exercises the right to take the boy out of the service, the boy will be court-mar-tialed for perjury and imprisoned for two years in a naval prison. Those who have the control of minor children are entitled to some consideration. The Department should do its utmost to prevent these boys going into the service ill advisedly. They are of no benefit to the service. If they be not discharged, they desert, and we have continual difficulties arising from boys enlisting without the consent of their parents and guardians, being refused their discharge, leaving the service of their own volition, obtaining employment, then being apprehended by private detectives who receive a reward from the Department for the return of these deserters. If this proposed amendment of the gentleman from Rhode Island will prevent these wild boys, these boys who are ill advised, from going into the service without the consent of their parents or guardians, it ought to be adopted, and any other amendment that would prevent them going into the service, except with proper consent, should be enacted into law.

The mere fact that the Department is suffering from the want of boys and men is no excuse for taking in improperly boys who imagine they will be satisfied in the service, but who quickly become discontented and make trouble for themselves, their parents, and everybody connected with the Government. I hope if this amendment will effect the desired result it will be adopted.

The gentleman from Rhode Island called my attention to this case some time ago. There is a gentleman in New York who is a philanthropist who makes it a business to look after boys who are homeless, and he seems to make it a special business to have himself appointed guardian by a court in the State so that he can give the consent required by the State for a boy to enlist. This boy, having run away from his home, with his father and mother living in Providence, applied to the enlistment officer in New York without being able to furnish certificate of birth or other written evidence that he had attained the age that would enable him to enlist. The recruiting officerthe boy having stated that he had no parents-suggested that he visit the office of the philanthropist. That gentleman had him sign an application to the court for the appointment of him as the boy's guardian. The boy swore his mother and father were dead, and prayed that the court appoint this man, whom he had never seen more than two or three minutes, as his guardian. The action had was purely of a formal nature, the order was signed, and thereupon this man signs this certificate, gives it to the boy, and the boy takes it and goes back to the same recruiting officer and is immediately enlisted in the naval Here is the case of a boy with a certificate from a man service who has been appointed his guardian, appointed upon a false statement of the boy, and his parents unable to take him from the service except upon condition that the boy shall be court-martialed and punished for perjury. It seems to me that the House should do whatever it can to prevent a recurrence of such a transaction, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to indorse all the remarks that have been made by the gentleman from Rhode Island, who introduced the amendment, and also of the gentleman from Island. man from New York, who has so clearly stated the case. I know of a great many cases similar to that related by the gentleman from Rhode Island, where young men under the age of 18 have run away from their homes and enlisted, and afterwards many of them becoming dissatisfied with the Navy, because they are too young to enter it, have deserted, being then hounded by officials and in some cases arrested and imprisoned, destroying their hope for future preferment in any kind of service. The fact that the Navy needs the boys is of course made clear to us by the statement of the chairman of the committee, but that fact alone should not weigh against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island, for in my judgment it is better to protect the youth from the liability of the trouble that arises from enlistments of boys too young and unfit for the service. I trust the amendment will be adopted. I feel sure that it will work well in the section of the State where I reside, and believe that it will work well everywhere for the better protection of the youth, and for the protection of the fathers and mothers who do not want their children taken from them in an unjust way.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I think we are too apt to listen to the stories of the boys and not to investigate all sides of the question. I know I have had a good many applications for discharges from the Navy, for one cause or another, but when I came to look up all of the facts never in a single instance have I found that the naval recruiting officer was at all to blame. These boys come to the recruiting offices and are very anxious to get into the Navy. They are full of the naval spirit; but after they get into the Navy and see that it means good hard work, then they want to get out, and very frequently they tell all kinds of stories and appeal to the sympathies of Members of Congress. want to say that so far as the recruiting officers are concerned. think they have been honest and conscientious in the discharge of their duties. Admiral Converse, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, and who is, in my judgment, one of the ablest officers in the American Navy to-day, speaking before the committee, said that most of the recruiting officers are very apt to err on the safe side, and are unwilling to accept any man unless they can get very good testimony in regard to his age. Now, what I do insist on is that we ought to make the same provision here for the Navy that we do for the Army and the Marine Last year we hedged about the applications for enlistment with additional provisions, which are in the law to-day, and which the committee recommend to remain in the law for the coming year, although those provisions have had a very disadvantageous effect upon enlistments. For instance, in the months of July and August, at Boston and various substations, there were 1,752 candidates presented themselves for enlistment, and of that number 200 passed. There were 966 who failed to present evidence of age and were rejected at Boston and sub-stations during the months of July and August. That shows that the naval recruiting officer is carrying out the provisions of the law.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Herbert Van Dyke does not live in Boston.

Mr. FOSS. I hope that the Members of the House will not be moved by these appeals in cases which come up, where I think Members pay too much attention to the stories of the boys and do not look thoroughly into all the facts in regard to the particular cases of enlistment. As I said before, the restrictions around the matter of enlistment in the Navy are a great deal more stringent to-day than they are in the Army or Marine Corps. For that reason I do not think that we ought to make them any more so, thereby checking the enlistment of men whom we are short of in the naval service.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. McNARY. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FOSS. I move to close debate.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the amendment be again reported. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to close debate.

Mr. McNARY. I had my motion in first.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts was not recognized.

I move to close debate in ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. On this amendment or on the paragraph? On the paragraph and amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] is not meeting this question squarely. I do not understand that anybody here has impugned the honor of the recruiting officers. As I understand the purpose of this amendment, it is to make clearer the fact that the boy himself must present absolutely reliable evidence, and not present evidence that appears to be fair and conclusive by means of fraud and duplicity. Now, if the naval officer accepts the evidence of the boy presented and believes it to be true, it is not necessarily duplicity on the part of the officer, but we desire to have the matter put in such a form that there will be no opportunity of fraudulent enlistment.

I believe in the American Navy and in upbuilding it, but every man from the northern stations, from Boston, New England, down the Atlantic seaboard, knows full well that there has been great and grievous complaint as regards the method of enlistment of boys in the Navy, and that we have been unable to get these boys out of the Navy, even though they were enlisted fraudulently and under age, and even though their guardians and parents demanded their release, because the Navy Department officials threatened the boy with prosecution for perjury.

Now, we desire to have this matter made clear and definite, and if there be boys—and there ought to be plenty of them—who seek to enter the American Navy, let them do it honorably and start their career in the right way, in truth and honesty, and not have them go in by fraudulent representations and per-It is certainly a queer school in which to start a boy if you expect to make him a truthful and honest man:

Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that one reason why the attraction of the Navy is not so great as the Army and Marine Corps is the fact that in both the Army and Marine Corps the man who goes in has a reasonable and definite opportunity, if he is studious, if he is honest and honorable, if he is intelligent and ambitious, of being able by passing an examination to be promoted into the list of officers. To be sure there is such a provision in the naval service, but as a matter of fact very few, if any, boys are ever allowed to reach beyond the position of warrant officer.

As a matter of fact, the provisions of the law allowing promotion into the ranks of officers are practically ignored, or deliberately ignored, so that it is almost impossible to-day for a boy who enters the American Navy, no matter how intelligent, no matter how earnest, no matter how ambitious he may be to become an officer in that Navy, it is almost impossible for him to do so, although the records of the Department prove and the history of the country shows that many of the most successful naval captains in our history from the days of the Revolutionary war were men who have been taken from the ordinary seafaring class and the merchant marine. Nobody will attempt to decry the great advantages of the present system of naval education, but if the gentleman wants to increase enlistments he should seek to change the law in such a respect that it will give boys who are ambitious and studious an opportunity to get into the ranks of the officers of the Navy, and he will find a far larger number of boys seeking enlistment than under the present system, because it will give them an opportunity that every American craves-to advance himself in life to the highest point his ambition and ability will let him.

I believe in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island, and let us have recruiting put on a square, honest, and honorable ground, by which fraudulent enlistments will be prevented upon the part of the boy himself or upon the part of fictitious guardians and parents-by means of false affidavits. Then boys can go into the Navy honorably and honestly, and Members of Congress will not be appealed to in the future, asking them to get boys out who have been enlisted by fraud and deception. Let us be square and honest with the boys and square and honest with the whole community, and in my judgment the Navy will not suffer once the policy is adopted and squarely maintained. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, as this debate, I believe, has five minutes more to run, I will just take two and a half minutes of that time and give the remaining portion to the gentlemen on the other side who desire to speak against the amendment. As the law is now we recruit boys under 18 years of age, with the consent of their parents or guardians. A boy As the law is now we recruit boys under 18 years that is over 18 years of age is not required to get the consent of his parent or guardian. In my judgment nobody ought to be enlisted in the Navy under 21 years of age without the consent of his parents. The parent ought to have a right higher than the right of the recruiting officer. The parent ought to have a right to control his boy until he is 21 years of age, but as the law is now the recruiting officer can enlist a boy at 18 years of age and the parent has no recourse. We are troubled year in and year out trying to get boys out of the Navy who enlisted contrary to the wishes of their parents, between the ages of 18 and 21; but as far as this amendment goes, as I understand it, it is to require some certainty in a boy's being 18 years of age when he pretends to be of that age. It is to prevent officials from relying altogether on the boy's statement as to his age, or upon the testimony of some man who bases his opinion upon the boy's statement only. It seems to me this is a wise amendment, that it is not contrary to the interests of the Government. admit that there are many desertions from the Navy. I admit it is hard to get enlistments for the Navy, but those faults ought not to be put upon individual citizens, the individual mothers and fathers of this country. If there is a fundamental fault, the Naval Committee ought to devise some plan to obviate it. If the conditions are hard, and thereby prevent enlistments in the Navy, then the Government ought to do something to alleviate those hard conditions. There ought to be some inducements held out, and conditions ought to be made such that it will not be difficult to enlist men in the Navy who are 21 years of age. There ought to be such conditions as will tend to discourage desertions and to decrease the number of desertions from the Navy. But with all this failure to enlist sufficient men, and with all these desertions, yet I do not believe it can be logically argued that it should remain easy for recruiting officers to enlist boys under 18 years of age without the consent of their parents, for we know a boy under that age who seeks to enlist is not a disinterested witness as to his age. As far as I am concerned I do not believe they ought to be permitted to enlist when under 21 years of age without the consent of the parents. I think this is a wholesome amendment and that it ought to be adopted.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, I agree fully with the proposition that every safeguard should be applied to prevent boys who are under the legal age from enlistment in the Navy, but the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. Granger], in my judgment goes too far. Our desire is and should be not to make it easy for boys under legal age to enlist through misrepresentation of their years, but also to obviate a condition which keeps those beyond that age from entering the service. According to the report of Admiral Converse, which I have before me, but which I have not now the time to read, he states that the great difficulty is that experienced at times by men who wish to enlist, but who can not within the necessary time produce positive proof of eligibility of age-men who would make valuable additions to the Navy, men thoroughly and legally qualified. It is to that class of men to whom we wish to give opportunity to enter the Navy, without being hampered and embarrassed in the way probably that this amendment, if adopted, would do, and which would have a deterrent rather than encouraging effect.

I append extract from the report of the Chief of Bureau of Navigation for 1906:

CERTIFICATES OF BIRTH.

The current naval appropriation act contains the following provision:

"That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in recruiting seamen, ordinary seamen, or apprentice seamen unless a certificate of birth or written evidence, other than his own statement, satisfactory to the recruiting officer, showing the applicant to be of age required by naval regulations, shall be presented with the application for enlistment."

Itstment."

The observance of this requirement has reduced enlistments of seamen, ordinary seamen, and apprentice seamen about 30 per cent. Few men who desire to enlist can produce, at short notice, "a certificate of birth or written evidence," not based upon their own statements, showing their precise age. Naturally every man intelligent enough to be wanted in the Navy knows his own age, but the majority of them when away from home can not confirm such knowledge by written evidence that is worth anything.

No State of Territory of the United States at the present time possesses a complete registration of births. It is estimated by the Director of the Census that in none of them registration reaches 90 per cent of the births, and this standard has been attained only in recent years. Registration is most complete in California, Colorado, Connecticut, the District of Columbia, Indiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, and Vermont, but even in these States it is probable that such information could not be obtained in more than 75 per cent of the actual cases; in all other States the records are still more imperfect.

Such are present conditions. Carrying the inquiry back eighteen or more years, to the date of birth of men now seeking to enlist in the Navy, a worse state of affairs is found. In a communication upon this subject the Director of the Census says:

"The statements made above will indicate the probability, in most cases, that there was very little satisfactory registration of births as far back as the year 1886."

This explains the serious falling off in enlistments under the statute above quoted. Given time enough, perhaps a majority of the men seeking to enlist could obtain the paper evidence called for by this statute, but to a considerable portion of them the requirement stands as a bar. Men who have left their homes seeking employment can rarely afford to await the slow and uncertain results of a search of any registration records that may have existed in their native States when they were born. Although admitted to other vocations, they find the Navy closed to them. The matter is one of grave public concern on account of the embarrassment to the service, on the one hand, and, on the other, the denial of the privilege of enlistment to a worthy and desirable class of citizens.

This statute has, by crippling enlistme

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division, demanded by Mr. Foss, there were—ayes 42, noes 26.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Outfits on first enlistment: Outfits for all enlisted men and apprentice amen of the Navy on first enlistment, at not to exceed $60 each, $600,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee the reasons for the change between the present bill and the bill of last year? I see the provision for outfit is raised from $45 to $60, and the provision in the bill last year allowing the Secretary in certain cases to charge against the men who had not served six months a portion of the outfit is stricken out. What is the object of the change?

Mr. FOSS. In regard to the first part of the gentleman's question I will say that we have increased the cost of the outfit to $60. That is due to the increased cost of materials. Admiral Converse said the cost of everything in the Navy has jumped up. He goes on to specify, for instance, that overshirts which formerly cost $2.40 the price is now $2.75, and blue trousers which cost $2.65 have jumped to $4.25, so that the same outfit which cost, for instance, $45 before, can not be purchased under $60 at the present time.

Mr. PERKINS. Has it jumped up in a single year as much as that'

Mr. FOSS. Well, not in a single year, no; but in the last two or three years

Mr. PERKINS. But the outfit last year was purchased at $45.

Well, it went over $45. Mr. FOSS.

Mr. PERKINS. That is what they were allowed by law.

Mr. FOSS. Then they cut off some things of the outfit, but now the full outfit which they will give to every one will cost $60. Mr. PERKINS. Why was the clause in reference to the refunding of the outfit stricken from the bill?

Mr. FOSS. If I recall rightly, that was made permanent law. The word "hereafter" was used, and of course when that is used it makes it permanent law, and it is not now necessary to put it in the bill this year.

Mr. PERKINS. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Maintenance of naval auxiliaries: Pay, transportation, shipping, and subsistence of civilian officers and crews of naval auxiliaries and all expenses connected with naval auxiliaries employed in emergencies which can not be paid from other appropriations, $500,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point on that. That, I think, is a new provision.

Mr. FOSS. No; it is an old provision. Mr. PERKINS. Then I am mistaken.

Mr. FOSS. The only new thing is the heading. It used to read "Maintenance of naval colliers." Now we change the word "colliers" to "auxiliaries" in order to include two provision ships and two ammunition ships, etc.

Mr. PERKINS. No; I think the gentleman is mistaken, or else I am. The clause just read is at the top of page 8.

Mr. FOSS. Well, that is the clause. It read "Maintenance of naval colliers" before.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, it now provides for the subsistence of civilian officers,

Mr. FOSS. Well, it did before. That was the law of last ear and for a number of years.

Mr. PERKINS. Then this provision is not a new provision? Mr. FOSS. No; only under this language they couple of provision ships and ammunition ships which were not included in the former law.

Mr. PERKINS. What does this cover, the expenses of men not in the Navy at all, in the State naval reserves?

Mr. FOSS. No; this provides for civilian crews to colliers and ammunition ships and provision ships. It is cheaper to run them with civilian crews than it is with officers and men of

Mr. PERKINS. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chair-

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval training station, Great Lakes: Maintenance of naval training station: Labor and material; general care, repairs, and improvements of grounds, buildings, and piers; street-car fare; purchase and maintenance of live stock, and attendance on same; wagons, carts, implements, and tools, and repairs to same; fire extinguishers; heating, lighting, and furniture; stationery, books, and periodicals; ice and washing; expressage; packing boxes and materials; postage, telegraphing, and telephoning; and all other contingent expenses, $20,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word with a view of getting some information with relation to the naval training station on the Great Lakes. I am a friend of that improvement, but I have been impressed with the notion that a great deal of money is being expended there, possibly more than the training station really requires. I would like to know how much has been appropriated heretofore for the establishment of the station, if the gentleman, the chairman of the committee, has it in mind.

Mr. FOSS. Last year we appropriated $750,000, and at the time when the board was appointed we appropriated $250,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That makes a million heretofore, and this bill carries altogether how much?

Mr. FOSS. This bill carries $700,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. So it will aggregate $1,700,000, and then plans have been adopted for the construction of buildings amounting to how much?

A provision was put in the appropriation bill last year, which was passed, to the effect that the buildings shall cost not to exceed $2,000,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not to exceed $2,000,000?

Mr. FOSS. Yes

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I notice an appropriation in this bill of $150,000 for a hospital.

Mr. FOSS. No; not in this bill. Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not in this bill?

Mr. FOSS. No.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I was mistaken. I thought there was an appropriation in this bill of $150,000 for a hospital. Well, does the gentleman expect that the $1,700,000 which has been appropriated, which this bill carries, with the additional $300,-000, making $2,000,000, will complete the work there?

Mr. FOSS. The provision was that the buildings should cost not to exceed $2,000,000. Of course, in addition to that there are matters outside, such as walks, filling of ravines, and the dredging of the basin.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Has any money been expended for the construction of a harbor there?

Mr. FOSS. The contract has been entered into, and the work is now going on for the dredging of the basin, which will cost, I believe, $24,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Has the gentleman any idea about the aggregate cost of that station-what it will cost when it is completed?

Mr. FOSS. I will say to the gentleman that under the vision of Congress last year, fixing the buildings at $2,000,000, that, of course, the bids have not been let, and the plans and specifications as to both of these have not yet been fully approved, and we do not know how much it is going to cost. should think the buildings could be built within the authorization of Congress of last year, namely, $2,000,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will a million dollars in addition do the balance of the work?

Mr. FOSS. I should think so and I should hope so.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I ask these questions not for the purpose of criticising, but for information.

Mr. FOSS. I am very glad the gentleman does.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. It has been intimated to me that the plan upon which the naval station there has been started if carried out would cost six or eight or ten millions of dollars.

Mr. FOSS. Oh, 170.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And I wanted to be informed in relation to it.

Mr. FOSS. I will say to the gentleman that that is entirely erroneous. I think our naval training station down at New-port, which is the best one we have, has probably cost in the neighborhood of two millions to two millions and a half, and I do not anticipate that this naval station will cost very much more than that. Of course, there is this thing to be taken into consideration. The cost of labor is high, and the cost of material at the present time is also high, and it may be that the naval training station will cost more than two millions and a half of dollars, but I would say that the man who has charge of it, Captain Ross, of the Navy, and who has had a great deal of experience in connection with public works of this kind in the Navy Department, is doing everything in his power to hold this down to a reasonable and economical basis.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to repeat that I very much favor the improvement, but I wanted to know, so that I might be able to give information if any request should be made respecting the amount of money that is being expended there and what will probably be required to complete the station. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the chairman of the Naval Committee answer one question?

Mr. FOSS. I will be pleased to.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How much of harbor facilities can be secured there for $24,000?

Mr. FOSS. I understand all that is necessary for small boats, which are the only boats used in the training of men.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What does the gentleman mean by small boats? How large are they?

Mr. FOSS. I do not know the exact size, but they are rowboats, lifeboats-

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Rowboats?

Yes; and lifeboats.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Those are rowboats.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; but they are larger than the ordinary row-

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That $24,000 will not build any thing of a harbor there and will not build any docks or any piers. The reason I asked this question, I will say to the gentleman, is this: The original law providing for the establishment of this station required that there should be estimates submitted by the board which reported in favor of the site, and that the President should confirm the report, and that report, of course, was to include these estimates. No estimates were made at that time and there were not for a long time after Lake Bluff was selected.

Now, I will ask the gentleman if there ever has been any estimates submitted as to the probable cost of a harbor at Lake Bluff site; and if so, what that harbor is to cost or what the estimate is?

The only estimates which have been finished, so Mr. FOSS. far as I am aware, were those submitted by the board at the time it made its report to the President,

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will say there is nothing in those estimates at all that I have ever seen, and I sent for the copy. There was no estimate made that I ever saw at that At least I asked for one, and could not find it, as to the cost of the harbor.

Mr. FOSS. They were made at that time with regard to other harbors along the Great Lakes, and particularly, as I re-call it, in regard to Muskegon.

I stated a moment ago, as I recall it, that the contract for dredging the basin was $24,000, but I find by looking it up in memorandum that the contract was a double contract. filling the ravines and dredging the basin, $38,400, comprising two purposes instead of one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Home, Philadelphia, Pa.: One superintendent of grounds, at 10; one steward, at $720; one matron, at $420; one beneficiaries' attendant, at $240; one chief cook, at $480; one assistant cook, at $360; one assistant cook, at $240; one chief laundress, at $192; five laundresses, at $168 each; four scrubbers, at $168 each; one head waitness, at $192; eight waitresses, at $168 each; one kitchen servant, at $240; eight laborers, at $240 each; one stable keeper and driver, at $360; one master at arms, at $480; two house corporals, at $300 each; one barber, at $360; one carpenter, at $845; one painter, at $845; one engineer for elevator and machinery, $600; three laborers, at $360 each; three laborers, at $300 each; total for employees, $14,110. Miscellaneous; Water rent and lighting, $2,100; cemetery, burial expenses, and head-stones, $800; improvement of grounds, $780; repairs to buildings, boilers, furnaces, and furniture, $6,748; music in chapel, $600; transportation of indigent and destitute beneficiaries to the Naval Home, $100; support of beneficiaries, $47,905; total miscellaneous, $59,033.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the item on page 10, line 21, "one steward, at $720."

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order? Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. I will say that it has been provided for hereto-

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been provided for at less compensation.

Mr. FOSS. At less compensation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is an increase of compensation, obnoxious to the rules, and is new legislation. I will reserve the point of order, if the gentleman thinks he can give a satisfactory explanation of it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, if my friend will give me his attention I will state to him that these estimates are sent in by the old sailors, and this money does not come from the United States Government, but comes from a fund that has been accumulated from the earnings of the sailors. It is their own fund; and I suggest to him that he will agree with us that what these old sailors feel that they ought to have provided for them we should give to them if it is to come out of their own fund.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. propriation is paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will look on page 12, at lines 21 and 22, where the whole business is summarized, he will find that it states "which sum shall be paid out of the income from the naval pension fund." As I understand this, it is a fund that belongs to the Navy. The Government has it in trust, and it is a fund over which I understand they have had the control.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why is this put in?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman asks why it is put in. I have already endeavored to explain the reason. It is at the request of the sailors themselves. This fund is provided by themselves out of their earnings. Government is the trustee, and they send in an estimate designating what they would like to have and the purposes for which they propose to use it, and we have always followed the suggestion and made the appropriation accordingly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman does not pretend to state to the committee that this has been done on the recommendation of the inmates of the Home?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Made to the Bureau of Navigation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not by the inmates here.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Made by the old sailors.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all. It is made by the man designated as the head of the Home.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. But the suggestion came from the sailorman, and the Naval Affairs Committee inserted it. Mr. FITZGERALD. Knowing the utter incapacity of the inmates of this Home to determine this question, if it is based upon their recommendation I insist upon the point of order. Mr. MANN. What is the reason for making the increase?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I will be very glad to answer my friend.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York will understand that it is necessary to have a good steward. Whether they could obtain one for $480 I do not know. But a good steward will save a great deal more than the difference between the salary of a good steward and a bad steward, as the gentleman will readily know. The steward is the man who makes the purchases of supplies.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes, he is; and it is recommended by the Department that they should have this officer.

Mr. MANN. What is the necessity for the increase? I can readily see that where stewards are in demand it may not be possible to obtain or retain the services of a good steward at $480 a year, which is only $40 a month.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Well, it is in this report. Mr. Chairman, here is the statement that is furnished by the Navy Department, upon which the Item was inserted as the committee was advised on the hearings referred to.

committee was advised on the hearings referred to.

The regulations of the Naval Home provide that in consideration of the faithful performance of such duties in and about the Home as may be directed by the governor or commanding officer each beneficiary shall receive $2 per month. This was afterwards increased to $3, and was paid up to March 1, 1906. Upon the question of the establishment of the rate of writer at the Home, at a compensation of $10 per month, the Comptroller of the Treasury rendered a decision, under date of March 22, 1806, to the effect that as the appropriation for the support of the Home provides specifically for forty-nine employees, other personal services than those authorized by the act are profibited by section 3679 of the Revised Statutes. This was considered to also cover the cases of beneficiaries who had been receiving a compensation of $3 per month for extra services performed, and consequently payment of this sum was stopped. To relimburse these beneficiaries for extra services rendered at the Home from March 1, 1906, to June 30, 1906, and also to pay certain workmen for services rendered to the Home during the second half of March, 1906, the present estimate is submitted.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not understand who is the beneficiary.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not understand who is the beneficiary. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that it is quite probable that they can not obtain and retain the services of a good steward at present for $40 a month.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the suggestions of the gentleman from Illinois usually carry great weight, but I have gone through the hearings of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the only thing that is said in there is that on page 21 of the hearings the chairman says:

I see here a provision for laborers and cooks, and so forth. You have separated it. There are a number of increases here.

Admiral CONVERSE. There is an increase in the pay of the stewards, the cooks, and two assistant cooks.

There is not a single word of explanation for any one of the increases. This naval pension fund is created, first, from certain prize moneys which were turned in for the support of naval hospitals many years ago. Now every officer and enlisted man in the Navy and in the Marine Corps has 20 cents a month deducted from his pay, which goes into this fund. If Congress is charged with the duty of supervising the expenditures from this fund, it should do so upon proper information and in an intelligent manner. I repeat that there is not a word in the hearings upon which the gentleman from Pennsylvania can base his statement that these increases are at the request of the inmates of the Home, who, as a matter of fact, are less entitled to make recommendations than anybody else, because they are enjoying the results of deductions made from all the men in the service; and merely because a recommendation is made is not, in my judgment, sufficient reason for the appropriation.

appropriation.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, I have not gone through the hearings upon this question, but I do not think the gentleman needs to go through the hearings to determine what I think is perfectly evident to the gentleman from New York, as it is perfectly evident to me, that it is to the interest of the Government at this point to have a good steward. It is perfectly apparent to the gentleman from New York, I believe, that to-day you can not obtain and retain the services of a good steward at $480 a year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If that were in the city in which the gentleman lives or the city in which I live that probably would be true, but I am not so sure about it in the city of Philadel-

Mr. MANN. My experience in the city of Philadelphia is that they know a good steward when they get one, and I think the good steward there knows how to perform properly, and I should question whether it would not require more pay to retain a good steward in Philadelphia than in any other city

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania probably is familiar with this, and while it does not appear in the hearings I desire to inquire whether he has made any investigation of this matter and knows whether it is necessary to have this increase in order to retain a competent man?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I understand it will be impossible to continue the services of this steward unless salary is raised. I further understand-and I do not think my friend will ask me the source of my information, but it is good-the services of this steward have been perfectly satisfactory, and that the authorities are especially desirous that they may be continued. I hope, in view of that statement—Mr. FITZGERALD. How many men are in this Home?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I very much wish I could answer my friend, for I should like to know myself. If the gentleman will restrain his desire for information until tomorrow morning, I will learn the number and tell him. I do not know how many.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman feels that the conduct of the Home will be interfered with, I will not press the point service and for the good of the Home, and I ask my friend to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. It is for the good of the else when they can do it just as well?

Mr. FITZGERALD. At the suggestion of the gentleman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

One secretary, $1,600; one master mechanic, at $3.28 per diem, $1,026.64; one store laborer, $480.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph. I want to know what the reasons are.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order against lines 3 to 6, inclusive, on page 12. the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] desire to discuss the paragraph on its merits?

Mr. MANN. It is a new provision in the bill. Mr. FOSS. So far as the first part is concerned-

Mr. MANN. What is the necessity of a secretary at $1,600? Mr. FOSS. These are new provisions in the bill, recommended by the head of the Naval Home, at Philadelphia, and also by the Secretary of the Navy.

In regard to the master mechanic and the storekeeper, Admiral Converse asked for the increase on account of the increased labors at the Home. I want to say that this Home is taken care of by the interest on the naval pension fund, which amounts to about $14,000,000, and that we have usually taken the recommendations of the officers in charge there with regard to these increases. Heretofore there have been comparatively few increases in the wages of the people employed in this Home, but we felt that this year there was more necessity for it. In regard to the allowance of pay for the beneficiaries from March 1 to June 30, 1906, that was due to the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, who in a ruling decided that these amounts which heretofore had been paid for extra duties to these beneficiaries should not be allowed.

Upon this matter Admiral Converse stated in the hearings as

The regulations of the Naval Home provide that in consideration of the faithful performance of such duties in and about the Home as may be directed by the governor or commanding officer each beneficiary shall receive $2 per month. This was afterwards increased to $3, and was paid up to March 1, 1906. Upon the question of the establishment of the rate of writer at the Home at a compensation of $10 per month the Comptroller of the Treasury rendered a decision, under date of March 22, 1906, to the effect that as the appropriation for the support of the Home provides specifically for 49 employees other personal services than those authorized by the act are prohibited by section 3679 of the Revised Statutes. This was considered to also cover the cases of beneficiaries who had been receiving a compensation of $3 per month for extra services performed, and consequently payment of this sum was stopped. To reimburse these beneficiaries for extra services rendered at the Home from March 1, 1906, to June 30, 1906, and also to pay certain workmen for services rendered to the Home during the second half of March, 1906, the present estimate is submitted.

That is what Admiral Converse said upon this subject. was in view of this decision of the Comptroller, and his decision was to the effect that because we only provided for 49 employ ees, therefore we could not go outside and pay for the extra services performed by these beneficiaries. That held up the amount which they were entitled to under the regulations of the Home.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman if the decision of the Comptroller was rendered since the last appropriation act providing that they should be authorized to obtain additional service through the use of the beneficiaries? That was in the last Was not the decision of the Comptroller rendered after this provision was put into the law?

Mr. FOSS. The decision of the Comptroller was rendered

March 22, 1906, a little less than a year ago.

Mr. MANN. That was before the present law was in effect. Then the gentleman last year, in view of that decision, put in the provision for the performance of additional services in and about the Home, and that the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to employ the beneficiaries and pay them out of the fund? Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That being the case, the Secretary of the Navy being authorized to employ the beneficiaries in the Home and give them some employment, what is the reason for employing additional employees outside of the Home entirely; why not give these men a chance to earn a little extra money?

Mr. FOSS. These people are old, and there is only a cer tain amount of work they can do around the Home. take up their minds and attention and give them these little amounts, say two or three dollars a month, so that they will feel that they are doing something.

Mr. MANN. I am in favor of that; but the point I am making is, Why do you want to cut them off and employ somebcdy

Mr. FOSS. We are not cutting them off, but we are providing for men to do the heavy work, and in that respect we are making provision for master mechanics.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay beneficiaries for extra duties performed by them at the Home from March 1 to June 30, 1906, in established ratings, $1,205.66.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order as to that, that it is a deficiency and should be carried in the proper bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the following-named men for services rendered to the Home during the second half of March, 1906: John T. Foley, mechanic, fourteen days, at $4 per diem, $56; Joseph S. Trainer, carpenter, fourteen days, at $2.80 per day, $39.20; Alonzo Hersh, plasterer, five days, at $2.80 per diem, $14; Frank W. Mohler, store laborer, one-half month, at $40 per month, $20.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order against that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for Naval Home, $78,124.50, which sum shall be paid out of the income from the naval pension fund: Provided, That for the performance of such additional services in and about the Naval Home as may be necessary, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ, on the recommendation of the governor, beneficiaries in said Home, whose compensation shall be fixed by the Secretary and paid from the appropriation for the support of the Home.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will be authorized to make the change in the total made necessary by striking out cortain provisions on points of order.

striking out certain provisions on points of order.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ammunition and other supplies for new ships, $750,000.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, line 22, after the word "dollars," insert the following:
"Provided, That immediately after the passage of this act all ammunition and other supplies already on hand under appropriation 'Increase of the Navy, armor and armament,' shall thereby be transferred to the appropriation 'Ordnance and ordnance stores,' the same as if purchased under that appropriation, and that this change of title shall be effected without a charge against the appropriation 'Ordnance and ordnance stores.'

"Provided further, That after the passage of this act all ammunition and other supplies now contracted for under the appropriation 'Increase of the Navy, armor and armament,' shall be transferred to the appropriation 'Ordnance and ordnance stores' immediately after such ammunition and other supplies have been delivered and paid for; that this change of title shall be effected without a charge against the appropriation 'Ordnance and ordnance stores.'"

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, the explanation is very simple. This appropriation has been carried heretofore—"Increase of the Navy"—over at the rear end of the bill, but now the Secretary of the Navy desires to put it here under the Bureau of Ordnance, and it is simply changing it from one part of the bill to another

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. It does not change any provision of law?

Mr. FOSS. It is a mere matter of bookkeeping, and I may say works to a more business-like management of the Bureau of Ordnance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] to this fact. Appropriations made under the part of the bill entitled "Increase of the Navy," if I am correctly informed, are available until expended. Appropriations made under this part of the bill are only available for two years. If the unexpended balances of the appropriations that have been heretofore made under the provision "Increase of the Navy" in former years are turned over in this way, it may be that they will thus be turned back into the Treasury. It would be a very wise thing for the gentleman from Illinois to know how much money now available for the purpose would thereby be taken from the Department. I desire to know whether that question has been looked into and whether the gentleman is able to state the amounts unexpended under the former appropriations and what amounts, if any, would be converted back into the Treasury as the result of the adoption of this provision.

Mr. FOSS. I will state to the gentleman that I can not tell him what amounts are unexpended of this appropriation which has been made heretofore under the "Increase of the Navy." I have not the figures here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask the gentleman whether that question was taken into consideration when the recommendation of the Secretary was agreed to or whether the Secretary of the Navy took that particular fact into consideration in making this request.

Mr. FOSS. Well, I do not know what the Secretary of the Navy took into consideration, but the main purpose or the reason which actuated the committee fully as much in recommending this provision was a reason which was given by the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, Admiral Mason, in which he says:

Under existing conditions, with ammunition and ordnance supplies carried under the two titles "Armor and armament" and "Ordnance and ordnance stores," this Bureau, being by regulation forbidden to keep accounts, is absolutely unable to keep a businesslike control and cognizance of this material under the separate titles. When the ammunition and supplies under both titles are issued to the naval magazines, the Bureau practically loses knowledge of the title under which the material is carried.

And for the reason that it was more businesslike and economic we were of the opinion that the recommendation of the Secretary and also the recommendation of the Chief of the Bureau ought to stand in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It may be much more businesslike, but I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that heretofore ammunition and other supplies for new ships were purchased out of the provision "Increase of the Navy, equipment, armor, and armament."

Yes Mr. FOSS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Last year there was appropriated over $15,000,000 for that purpose. For a number of years—five or six-past the appropriations have been very large and they have been based to some extent upon the contracts that have been made or were in contemplation, and under the law the appropriations are available until expended. This particular appropriation will be available for two years only, and by that time, if it be not expended, it will revert to the Treasury. just possible that under this proposed amendment large balances that are now to the credit of this fund will, as a matter of fact, be taken from the available amounts that the Department has now to meet contract obligations, and as this is the short session of Congress it might very seriously embarrass the Department in the performance of its work. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that a provision of so much importance should not be offered to the House in this way at this time. I will insist upon the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the Secretary of the Navy would have recommended this if he thought it was in any way going to embarrass him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is just possible he did not know anything about it.

Mr. FOSS. Then I think if the gentleman from New York will only call the attention of the Secretary to this important matter that it will probably relieve him of any embarrassment which might be occasioned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I prefer to avoid the embarrassment by exercising a right I have rather than to rely upon some right I have not.

I appreciate the gentleman's zeal in pointing this out. Now, so far as the point of order is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is subject to the point of order. been held it is in order to authorize a new ship upon the naval appropriation bill, and it is certainly in order to authorize any part or portion of a new ship. This is for the ammunition and other supplies of new ships, $750,000. I understand the gentleman makes his point of order to that provision.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not. Mr. FOSS. Or to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. FOSS. I have nothing further to say.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair, if the Secretary has not authority to make the transfer as recommended by him, if it is necessary that Congressional action be taken in order to authorize such transfer, why the provision is legislation and subject to the rules.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, upon that point I think I can show to the Chair that the Secretary of the Navy has the authority to put the busines The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests, then, what is the necessity of the legislation?

Mr. FOSS. There is no necessity, only simply that it should be in proper form in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But, Mr. Chairman, this attempts to transfer appropriations heretofore made from one account to another, and the Secretary of the Navy has no power to make any such transfer.

Mr. FOSS. So far as this appropriation is concerned, whether the appropriation is made here on page 17 or whether it is made under "Increase of the Navy," the same bureau has jurisdiction

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not made the point of order against the language in the bill.

Mr. FOSS. But if the Chair will reserve his decision until to-morrow, I think I can show the Secretary has jurisdiction of this matter

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the statement of the chairman of the committee that he believes he can produce authority to the Chair for this provision, the Chair will ask the unanimous consent of the committee to pass this matter over without prejudice until to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] None is heard, and that course will be followed.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completing the work of modifying 4-inch .40-caliber mounts, and providing new sights; and for modifying 5-inch .40-caliber mounts, and providing new sights for same, $100,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the I desire to inquire why this particular item is last word. placed in the bill?

To what item does the gentleman refer?

The CHAIRMAN. Lines 15 to 18, inclusive, page 14.
Mr. FOSS. Well, I can refer him to the hearings, on page 49, before the committee

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what I desired to ascertain about.

Mr. FOSS. And also to the report of the chief, on page 5.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Heretofore this work has been done out of other appropriations.

Mr. FOSS. Whatever has been done has been done under the general work of the appropriation for the Bureau of Ordnance and Ordnance Stores

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why is this item segregated, and has it resulted in any decrease of the appropriation available for any other purpose?

Mr. FOSS. Well, the estimates were made upon the basis of two items, and what would otherwise have been placed under the general appropriation for ordnance and ordnance stores has been taken out of that and put in a separate paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman know how much has been already expended for that purpose?

Mr. FOSS. No; but very little if anything has been expended, but from time to time there have been modifications of these new sights and mounts upon our ships, but now they have worn out and need repair. I also state there have been new inventions in these matters during the last two or three years, and the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance thinks the time has now arrived when these modifications should be made and that the ships should be brought up to date.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no question as to the propriety, the advisability, of bringing ships up to date, but the hearings show that this work has heretofore been done out of general appropriations. The experience of the House has been that where appropriations are divided and the items segregated in this way it takes but a very short time very largely to increase the total appropriation for the same purpose. I took occasion to point out three or four years ago, where certain paragraphs in the naval appropriation bill had been divided into independent paragraphs, that the appropriations increased over 300 per cent paragraphs, that the appropriations increased over 300 per cent as a result of so dividing them. The recommendation for this work last year was $320,000. The hearings show the estimates made this year would complete the work. I do not recall whether the $100,000 is the complete estimate—

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. No; it is not.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Two hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars is asked for.

Which shows that last year the differ-Mr. FITZGERALD. ence between $235,000 and $320,000-namely, $95,000-was expended for this very purpose out of the general appropriation for the Bureau. The Bureau will obtain practically $100,000, an amount equal to that expended last year, in addition to the current appropriation for the Bureau. My opinion is that this will result, without the Members of the House appreciating it, in largely increasing the appropriation for this Bureau. It will come about because these two items will be carried in the bill, and hereafter it will be very difficult to trace the history of the For that reason I move to strike out that paraappropriation. graph of the bill.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Firz-gerald] moves to strike out lines 15 to 18, inclusive, on page 14. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fire-control instruments for nineteen battle ships and twelve armored cruisers; for fire-control instruments for four monitors and twenty-five cruisers, $300,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I wish to call the attention of the committee to some remarkable statements made to the Committee on Naval Affairs. It has been our pride that the American seamen have been the most expert marksmen in the world. The records that have been made in target practice both for accuracy of fire and rapidity of firing have never been equaled in any other Navy in the world. And yet we find in the hearings before the Naval Committee that an officer of the Navy states that experience at target practice indicates that rapid hitting is possible and "information from abroad indicates that it is neces-I suppose that this is the first time, in the history of the modern navy, at least, and possibly in the history of the navy before the modern ships, that any naval officer thought it was necessary to report what had happened abroad in the line of marksmanship, either as to accuracy or rapidity, in order to set up a standard for the men of the American Navy. Indeed, the accuracy of the marksmen of the American Navy has been the admiration of the navies of the civilized world. I am astonished that, when other naval authorities are sending here to seek information, when they are expressing admiration and astonishment at the proficiency of our seamen, some officials should find it necessary to refer to what has happened abroad as an indication of what should be done in this country. I have no doubt whatever that the seamen and the marksmen on board of the ships of the American Navy excel in a very great degree those on board of the ships of any other naval power. And I trust that whatever may be appropriated for instruments of fire control, to perfect the accuracy of the shooting of the men on board our ships, will not be based upon information that has not been found from our own experiences, without regard to what has happened in other countries.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitz-GERALD] moves to strike out lines 19, 20, 21, and 22, inclusive, The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Reserve ammunition: Toward the accumulation of a reserve supply of powder and shell, $2,000,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of shells or projectiles except for shells or projectiles purchased in accordance with the terms and conditions of proposals submitted by the Secretary of the Navy to all of the manufacturers of shells and projectiles and upon bids received in accordance with the terms and requirements of such proposals. All shells and projectiles shall conform to the standards prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting information from some member of the committee. Last year there was an appropriation of $2,000,000 for reserve of powder and shell and also $750,000 for a reserve of guns. A similar provision is contained in the bill this year and has, I think, been carried in this bill for many years. I would like to be informed as to what this reserve is. We have now appropriated millions and millions to accumulate a reserve. Does the time ever come when the reserve is completed?

I want to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Perkins] that last year was the first time we made any appropriation for reserve ammunition.

Mr. PERKINS. That was the first time?

Mr. FOSS. That was the first time; and the recommendation in the estimate last year was $4,000,000. We cut that down to $2,000,000, and this year the estimate was four millions and we cut it down to two millions.

Mr. PERKINS. How large is this reserve to be that is to be created?

Mr. FOSS. Well, it is suggested that four millions will

Mr. PERKINS. Is it to stop at four millions or will there be a provision next year for two millions?

Mr. FOSS. No doubt there will be a provision right along, as we are very much behind in stores of ammunition. Since this bill has been reported the Department have recommended that we make the appropriation larger.

Mr. PERKINS. What is done with the powder and shell of these reserves? It must be taken out, otherwise the reserve would keep on growing until finally it would amount to twenty millions.

It is stored and ready for cases of emergency. Mr. PERKINS. Where is the $2,000,000 worth of powder and shell that was purchased last year for the reserve?

Mr. FOSS. That is being manufactured at the present time. That appropriation did not go into effect until the 1st of July last.

Mr. BATES. Let me read to the gentleman the testimony of Admiral Mason on this subject when he was before the committee. He states that the probable expenditure of this appropriation will net four millions:

$911, 200 2, 600, 000 368, 000 70, 000

Mr. PERKINS. What is done with this reserve?

Mr. MADDEN. As a matter of fact, they take the reserve for target practice.

Mr. BATES. The reserve is procured for actual use:

As stated in last year's estimates, it seems imperative that there should be acquired at the earliest date practicable a reserve supply of ammunition sufficient to refill the main battery magazines of the fleet twice and the secondary battery magazines once. This is because a modern battle ship at her maximum rate of gun fire will exhaust the magazines supplying her main battery in about half an hour, and her secondary battery ammunition will not last much longer.

Mr. PERKINS. The bill makes an appropriation for the purchase of a still further amount this year

Mr. BATES. He states that this is required. Mr. PERKINS. I do not care what he states. Mr. BATES. It answer the question. Mr. PERKINS. I think not.

Mr. BATES (reading):

That the accumulation of this reserve should be undertaken at once is evidenced by the fact that the manufacture of shell of sufficient merit to meet the Bureau's requirements has, in many instances, taken from two to three years

Mr. PERKINS. What is done with the powder and shell?

Is it used in target practice?

Mr. FOSS. It is stored.

Mr. PERKINS. Besides the $2,000,000 worth of powder that was purchased last year?

We are going to store it up. We have a place for reserve supply of powder on every ship, and in addition to that we have stores and magazines in other parts of the country.

Mr. PERKINS. Then if we are to have $2,000,000 for the increase reserve of powder and shot piled up each year, it will get to ten or twelve millions.

Mr. FOSS. We have got to have a reserve.
Mr. PERKINS. How big has it got to be?
Mr. FOSS. The estimate last year was that $9,126,000 would be required in order to have a reserve of ammunition for all the ships in the Navy, and so this $2,000,000 was appropriated last year, and we are endeavoring to make the reserve as large as it should be. There is no question as to the necessity of making the reserve

Mr. PERKINS. How is it that we never had a reserve before in a hundred years of naval history?

Mr. FOSS. I think that the gentleman will find that we have always had some reserve, and the gentleman will find there has always been some reserve of powder and shot.

Mr. PERKINS. I thought the gentleman stated that last year was the first appropriation for such purpose. I am asking

Mr. FOSS. That was the first specific appropriation carried in our bill for reserve.

Mr. PERKINS. Then it was the beginning of the reserve. Mr. FOSS. It was the beginning of the piling up, I may say, of reserve ammunition for the Navy.

Mr. PERKINS. Then there was no reserve ammunition for the Navy during the century before?

Mr. FOSS. We appropriated $50,000,000 one day before the time we entered upon the Spanish war, and a large portion of that went into reserve, which we had not provided for before. Now, we propose to go to piling up our reserve, so that in case of necessity or emergency we will be ready.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it ever used except in case of war?

Mr. FOSS. It might be, and it might not.

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will permit me, I will answer that inquiry.

I should be glad to get an answer from Mr. PERKINS.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to say to the gentleman that I asked the same question of the Admiral a year ago in the committee, and he stated that after we had reached the time when the first stored would be used the old is replenished from the current appropriation. The older reserves would be used in target practice and for current uses; so that there would not be a continual piling up. The old ammunition would be used and that would be replenished from the new.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me ask these naval experts another question. This powder is stored, then, it may be, for a period of four or five years. Is there any deterioration of powder that is stored for so long a time as this?

Mr. PADGETT. They stated that there was practically no deterioration.

Mr. PERKINS. Practically none, though stored for four or five years?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know the limit. They stated that there was practically no deterioration in the powder.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I should like to get the matter clear in I understand that before the Congress adopted the policy of providing for a reserve the only reserve would be a surplus.

Mr. PADGETT. That had been retained from current appropriations:

Mr. CRUMPACKER, From the ammunition that was provided for current use.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And now the policy is to provide a reserve that is segregated for emergencies and that is to reach a certain aggregate, and when it does it is to be used?

Mr. PADGETT. Added to, and some used from the later reservations.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is a little like the redemption fund in the Treasury. We used to have none—
Mr. PERKINS. They say that does not work very well in the Treasury

Mr. CRUMPACKER. We used to have no specific segregated redemption fund, but a few years ago we provided one, and the Navy Department is now arranging to provide for a reserve store of ammunition.

Mr. DAWSON. Simply large enough to fill the ships' magazines once.

Mr. PERKINS. How many million dollars would it take?
Mr. DAWSON. About $9,000,000, for which we already appropriated last year $2,000,000. If we keep appropriating $2,000,000 a year, in 1910 we will have this reserve large enough to fill the magazines of the ships once.

Mr. PERKINS. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.
Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to strike out in line 5 the words "powder and shell" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "ammunition."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, page 15, strike out the words "powder and shell" and in-rt the word "ammunition."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Reserve torpedoes and appliances: For the purchase or manufacture of reserve torpedoes and appliances, $250,000.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 19, page 15, after the word "dollars," insert the following: "Provided, That of this amount not more than $155,000 shall be used for the construction and equipment of a torpedo factory at the torpedo station at Newport, R. I."

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on the amendment. could not hear it read.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. I should like to hear the amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MANN. Does that read "not more than?" Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Yes. Does the gentleman reserve a point of order?

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

It is a limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that I think this amendment will render the purpose of the appropriation more certain, and will effect not only what I think a very proper provision, but also the intention of the Department and of this committee. I call the attention of the committee to the following language in the report on this bill on page 5:

An appropriation of $250,000 is recommended for the purchase and manufacture of reserve torpedoes and appliances. The Chief of the Bureau is of the opinion that he can manufacture 21-inch torpedoes for $3,500 each, which would be a saving of $1,500 on each torpedo, and as we require a large number of them, the committee have thought it would be economy to allow him to make the trial.

These 21-inch torpedoes now cost us $7,100 each. mate of the Bureau is that we can make them for $3,500 each, but to that estimate is to be added the wear and tear of the plant and also a royalty of perhaps $500 on each torpedo.

But it would appear that by making the torpedoes we can save from $2,000 to $2,500 on each torpedo. There is only one concern in the United States that now makes these torpedoes. Its capacity is 100 torpedoes a year. The Department says that we need 200 torpedoes a year. In other words, the private concern can only make half of what the Government needs annually. Then, in view of the fact that we will have this great saving upon the torpedoes if we make them, and in view of the very strong recommendations of the Department in favor of the torpedo factory, it seems to me it is good business and wisdom to authorize in direct terms the erection of this factory.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. How much would it take to establish and equip a torpedo factory?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. That question was asked, and Admiral Mason answered that $155,000 would make it and equip it. For that reason the language of the amendment says "for the erection and equipment of a torpedo factory.

Mr. DAWSON. If the gentleman-will allow me, if I understood his amendment, it is to fix the place or location of the

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. At Newport.

Mr. DAWSON. Does the gentleman think it is wise for us to fix the place at which the factory is to be erected? Would it not be better to leave that to the discretion of the officers in the Navy Department?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I followed the recommendation of the Navy Department because in their estimate they had the item, but they put it in another part of the bill. recommendation is to have it at Newport, where they now carry on the torpedo experiments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman believe that $250,000 is enough for the item, even without taking some of it for the purpose of erecting a Government factory?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman from New York, my idea is that it will take twelve months to erect the factory, and $250,000 will be enough to erect a factory and to supply the money that will be required in that factory for the next fiscal year. But, if we are going to buy 100 additional torpedoes in the next fiscal year, then it will take more than double the appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will not be possible to obtain the 100 torpedoes in any one year by purchase?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. That is correct, and before we can manufacture any at Newport ourselves we must first have a factory. I think it is safe to authorize the erection of this plant out of this appropriation. Then, after we have our plant perfected, hereafter it may be necessary to appropriate $500,000 a year to the plant in order to make the necessary torpedoes.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. How about the royalty? Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. As to the royalty, I As to the royalty, I have alluded to that. Admiral Mason thought $500 on each torpedo a sufficient royalty.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it proposed that the Government shall make all of the torpedoes?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. No; personally, I should favor that, but the recommendation of the Department is that we be prepared to make them, and to make one-half of our supply in that respect, as I understand the testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "two hundred and fifty" in line 19 and insert in place thereof the words "five hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 19 strike out the words "two hundred and fifty" and insert the words "five hundred."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, under the amendment that has just been adopted $155,000 will be utilized for the building of a torpedo factory. The Department asked for building of a torpedo factory. $500,000 for the purpose of acquiring reserve torpedoes. Last year they asked Congress to give $100,000 for that purpose, and no money was given. In the hearings it was shown that 606 torpedoes are needed to supply the ships now in commission. The Department has on hand 570, and the Chief of the Bureau states that so long as this condition continues the Department is not prepared for war so far as its ability to supply these ships with torpedoes is concerned.

recollect in the last session I called the attention of the House to the fact that the Department had notified the committee that it did not have sufficient torpedoes to supply one round for all the vessels in commission.

If we are to maintain our Navy, there is no more important thing, in my judgment, than to have the ammunition on hand that would be required in case the vessels were called into service. The committee gave $250,000 for the purpose of obtaining these torpedoes. One hundred and fifty-five thousand dollars of that is to be utilized in building a factory. It seems to me that at least more than $100,000 should be available for the purpose of obtaining torpedoes. The hearings show that they cost, if obtained by contract, $7,000; that about twenty are lost in each year in experimenting and practicing with the ships, so that the $100,000 that will be available to acquire new torpedoes will not be sufficient even to replace those that are likely to be lost during the coming year. Whatever desire there may be to economize, to keep down appropriations, it seems to me that the Department should have sufficient funds to acquire either by contract or purchase sufficient torpedoes to at least supply one round for the ships now in commission. In addition to that, it is pointed out in the hearings that in the course of a few years 996 will be the number of torpedoes that will be required for one round for all the ships in commission, and the Department asks in addition that it have a reserve sufficient to supply an additional round. It would take a great many years, even utilizing the one plant that exists and the plant that it is proposed We should either stop to erect, to furnish these torpedoes. placing torpedo tubes in the battle ships and building torpedo boats to utilize torpedoes or else we should at least have on hand a sufficient number to permit these vessels to be used if, unfortunately, they should be called into action.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Perkins having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 23551. An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908; and

H. R. 21383. An act providing that terms of the circuit court of the United States for the western district and of the district court of the United States for the northern division of the western district of the State of Washington be held at Bellingham.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H, R. 25242) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ELKINS, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. MALLORY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 23821) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Perkins, Mr. Warren, and Mr. DANIEL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 21204. An act to amend section 4446 of the Revised Statutes, relating to licensed masters, mates, engineers, and

H. R. 22291. An act to authorize the reappointment of Harry McL. P. Huse as an officer of the line in the Navy; military reservation of Fort Douglas, Utah; and

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

wharves; boats, instruction, instruments, tools, furniture, experiments, and general torpedo outfits, and new smokestack and flues for bollers, $70,000.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks not to exceed fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to speak for fifteen minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, my remarks to-day will be a comparison of the Army and the Navy with reference to pay, promotion, retirement, and command. It is a subject large enough for days of speech. I want to put before the House in a few words, without referring more than need be to figures, the conditions which attend two of the most honorable professions that exist-professions in which officer and man devote their lives-yes, themselves in life or death-to the service and command of their country.

PAY OF ENLISTED MEN AND NONCOMMISSIONED OFFICERS

Mr. Chairman, we learn much from the estimates. The estimates of the Navy (p. 493) are for 37,500 petty officers, seamen, and other enlisted men. The appropriation asked for them is $13,500,000. It will be understood that I speak in round numbers. The appropriations asked for the Army on pages 169 and 170 of the estimates were for about 59,500 men, and the appropriations asked for them were $12,556,000. Thus, for over 59,000 men less is asked than for 37,500. The average for the Army which was asked for all noncommissioned officers and men is $212.50 a year, and the average for the Navy which is asked is $360 a year. Again, in the number of the Army already given are included all noncommissioned officers, sergeants, corporals, electricians, and pharmacists. The Navy appropriation referred to does not include what are called "warrant officers," allowed by statute, though it does include petty officers. These petty officers are paid as fixed by the President's order, and instead of the pitiful sum of $30 or $34 a month that we pay our sergeants with the exception of a few electricians who get $60 or $70 a month, naval petty officers are paid as high as $85 a month on the President's order.

But besides those petty officers there are what are known as "warrant officers," in number 819, with a pay running from $900 to $1,950, comprising boatswains, carpenters, sailmakers, machinists, pharmacists, and mates, with an average pay of $1,239.36, making altogether for warrant noncommissioned officers, petty officers, and enlisted men, 38,319 in number, $14,500,-000 and odd, or an average pay of $378.58, which is 80 per cent more than the average pay of the Army. Do not think that I complain of the inequality, Mr. Chairman. But in these days of varied pursuits skill is needed in artillerymen, electricians, photographers, and machinists. Skilled farriers, saddlers, etc., are needed in the cavalry. In the Engineering Corps, and all through the Army, we need skilled men with training, and the United States must pay them if we expect to have them I wish that we could have the same rule in the and keep them. Army that exists in the Navy, and that the settlement of the pay could belong to the Executive, so that instead of appropriating as we do for every sergeant and corporal we could appropriate for the pay of the Army and leave the President to order what rates should be paid as a practical matter of necessity that changes from day to day.

The following and all other extensions of my remarks are in small print, so as not to break the current of what I said.

NOTE ON NONCOMMISSIONED OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN.

The conditions of the service of enlisted men and warrant and petty officers are very different in the Army and Navy. The number of such in the Army are as follows:

Noncommissioned officers and men.	Number.	Pay.
Line Engineers. Ordnance Department Quartermaster's and Subsistence Department Electricians, Artillery Corps. Signal Corps Hospital Corps	52,578 1,282 700 400 125 1,212 3,155	223, 372, 00 96, 600, 00 69, 300, 00
Total	59,452	12, 556, 126, 25

This is an average pay for each enlisted man of $212.83.

The warrant officers of the Navy (see pp. 614-615) are as follows: 4 chief boatswains (ensigns after twenty years), at $1,960; 3 chief boatswains (fourth five years), at $1,820; 20 chief boatswains (third five years), at $1,680; 2 chief boatswains (third five years) (beyond seas), at $1,748; 37 chief boatswains (second five years), at $1,540; 2 chief boatswains (second five years), at $1,694; 59 boatswains (second five years), at $1,300; 46 boatswains (first three years), at $1,200; 5 chief gunners (ensigns after twenty years), at $1,960; 6 chief gunners (fourth five years), at $1,820; 17 chief gun ners (third five years), at $1,680; 48 chief gunners (second five years), $1,540; 1 chief gunner (second five years) (beyond seas), $1,694; 35 gunners (second three years), at $1,300; 56 gunners (first three years), at $1,300; 10 chief carpenters (ensigns after twenty years), at $1,960; 2 chief carpenters (fourth five years), at $1,820; 21 chief carpenters (third five years), at $1,960; 28 chief carpenters (second five years), at $1,540; 1 chief carpenter (second five years), at $1,540; 1 chief carpenter (second five years), at $1,300; 30 carpenters (first three years), at $1,200; 6 chief sailmakers (ensigns after twenty years), at $1,960; 116 warrant machinists (third three years), at $1,400; 52 warrant machinists (second three years), at $1,300; 82 warrant machinists (first three years), at $1,200; 17 pharmacists (fourth three years), at $1,600; 4 pharmacists (third three years), at $1,400; 4 pharmacists (second three years), at $1,300, and 66 mates (appointed since August 1, 1894), at $900.

The pay of petty officers and seamen is shown on page 575 of Pulsifer's Navy Year Book (S. Doc. 140, 59th Cong., 2d sess.), which is a perfect mine of information, as follows:

Chief petty officers, $50 to $85.

Petty officers, first class, $36 to $70; second class, $35 to $45; third class, $30 to $35.

Seamen, first class, $24 to $28; second class, $19 to $33; third class, $16 to $24.

Commissary branch, $16 to $80; mess men branch, $16 to $65; enlisted men of the Morine Corps. $13 to $44.

Seamen, first class, $24 to $28; second class, $19 to $33; third class, $16 to $24.

Commissary branch, $16 to $80; mess men branch, $16 to $65; enlisted men of the Marine Corps, $13 to $44.

The above rates of pay are affected by the following provisions:
Allowance of 75 cents per month for each good-conduct medal, pin, or bar; allowance of $5 per month for duty on submarine vessels of the Navy; allowance of $5 per month for crew mess men; allowance of 33 cents per day for seamen and ordinary seamen doing duty as signalmen; allowance of from $1 to $3 per month for men doing duty as signalmen; allowance of from $2 to $10 per month for men doing duty as signalmen; allowance of from $2 to $10 per month for men doing duty as gun pointers.

The above are the most important variations of pay allowed by law. A few are not given, because of the small number of men affected.

By a more recent Executive order the pay of each rating is increased $5 a month during the second period of service, and $3 per month during every subsequent period of service. The pay of noncommissioned officers of the Army is shown on pages 169, etc., of the estimates. Sergeant-majors get $408; first sergeants, $300; farriers, corporals, and sutiers, $180; wagoners, $168; musicians, trumpeters, and privates, $156. Some of the chief musicians get up as high as $720; first sergeants in the Signal Corps, $540; master electricians (end of page 170) get $900.

It is interesting to compare the first-class sergeants in the Hospital Corps, $540 a year, besides longevity pay, amounting in all to nearly $60 a month, or $720 a year, while a first-class pharmacist in the Navy, which is the same position, gets $1,600 a year.

Beyond all question, the varied pay which must in these days be given to men of varied skill should not wait the years which are necessary for Congressional legislation, but be fixed by Executive order, so as to get, keep, and properly reward the right men. And some equality should be established between the like employment in the Army

PAY OF .COMMISSIONED OFFICERS

Now, Mr. Chairman, I pass briefly—I have little time—I pass briefly to the officers. Their pay in the Army and Navy is nominally the same-that is to say, men of equivalent rank get the same pay. The naval ensign has rank and pay of a second lieutenant; a junior lieutenant in the Navy has the pay of a first lieutenant in the Army; a lieutenant in the Navy has the pay of a captain in the Army; a lieutenant-commander has the rank and pay of a major; a commander has the rank and pay of a lieutenant-colonel, and a captain in the Navy has the rank and pay of a colonel. A rear-admiral of less than five years' service gets the pay of a brigadier-general, and after only five years' service he receives the pay of a major-general. But that pay of the rank does not state the whole case. When a young man goes into business or into a profession he does not want to know merely what is the pay of the various grades, but how many there are in the higher grades and what chance he has for promotion. The difference is already indicated by the statement that a rear-admiral of the Navy, ranking with and paid the pay of a brigadier-general, is promoted for five years' serv-ice to the pay of a major-general. The estimates are for 1,079 commissioned officers in the Navy of all grades, and for somewhere between 3,400 to 3,500 in the Army. There ought to be, therefore, over three times as many officers of the rank of major-general in the Army as in the Navy; but instead of that there are only half as many—seven major-generals of the Army and fourteen rear-admirals, with major-generals' pay, in the Navy.

There are twenty-five brigadier-generals in the Army, and the Navy, with not one-third as many officers, should have eight, and has eleven. For the ninety-four colonels in the Army there should be thirty-one captains in the Navy, and there are eighty-four. For the one hundred and twelve lieutenant-colonels there should be thirty-seven commanders, and there are one hundred and twenty-two. For the two hundred and eighty-five majors there should be ninety-five lieutenant-com-manders, and there are two hundred and six.

Less than 3 per cent of Army officers are colonels and 11 per cent of the Navy officers are of the equivalent rank and pay of Eight per cent of the Army officers are majors and 19 per cent of the Navy officers are lieutenant-commanders, with majors' pay.

Twenty-seven per cent of the Army officers are first lieutenants. The equivalent grade in rank and pay is that of junior lieutenant, and there are none in the Navy and will be none in 1908.

Captains and second lieutenants will not show the same difference.

The result of it all is that 438 of the 1,079 officers of the Navy, or over 40 per cent, get the pay of major or more, whereas in the Army only 524 out of 3,436, or less than 16 per cent, get that pay. In both lists we take only such staff bureaus as are officered from the line, leaving out doctors, chaplains, paymasters, and naval constructors.

Do we wonder that the Army generals, majors, and captains, and colonels sometimes wish for promotion? Perhaps it is not wrong that a man of ability and character, who has given his life to his country, should have a fair chance to get the pay that comes to men in business life of $5,000 to $7,000 a year.

To state the matter otherwise, the pay of 3,433 Army officers of all grades is estimated at $7.815,300, or at an average of $2,274.50 each, while the pay of 1,079 Navy officers is estimated at $3,087,784, or an average of $2,862 each. Officers in the Navy, on the average, get more than a quarter more pay than in the Army. The reason is that there is not the same proportion of higher officers in the Army. It is not a question of the pay of each rank, but that there are more promotions.

I insert here certain tables giving details as to these statements:

This average pay of $2,274.56 in the Army and $2,862 in the Navy, and certainly the pay of $1,400 and $1,500 in the lower grade for the first five years, are, in the judgment of many, inadequate. The rates of pay were settled many years ago. Expenses have largely increased for uniforms, food, wages, and rents. Commutation of quarters is ludicrously small and should certainly vary with the size of the town where the duty is performed, and possibly with the size of the officer's family. It would be invidious to express an opinion whether the Army or the Navy need most pay. The naval officer, besides supporting his family, must contribute to his officers' mess, must regard himself as representing the United States, and must be hospitable when he meets officers of other countries. The Army officer, when ordered to the Philippines, must take his family with him or send them home, and receives nothing for their traveling expenses. Without comparison of one service with the other, the pay of our officers is not enough. The style of living has changed since it was adopted. It is idle to suggest that teachers, clergymen, and lawyers in the country often receive less. They are not required, like the officer, to keep themselves and their family well dressed, well educated, ready to accept any courtesies shown them by any neighborhood where they may be, as well as to change their home whenever the Government may order.

The Navy officer has a variety of responsibilities and duties, involving artillery, engineering, equipment, repair, and supply, as well as seamanship and international law and its practical application, which do not fall upon the Army officer, and which give to the officer of the Navy a variety of training which is much to be envied.

Navy cadetship lasts for six years instead of four years. The age limit, however, is two years younger in the Army, so that the age of commission as ensign or second lieutenant is expected to be about the same.

In comparing the position of officers in the two branches of the

In comparing the position of officers in the two branches of the service, it is fair that the separate bureaus, which are called the staff, should be reckoned with the line when they are, in fact, filled wholly or mostly by promotions from the line. This is the case in the Army with the departments or bureaus of The Military Secretary, Inspector-General, Engineers, Ordnance, Quartermaster-General, Subsistence, Judge-Advocate-General, and insular possessions. The Medical Department and the places of chaplains are filled from civil life and not from the line, and the pay department in the Army and Navy, and the civil engineers in the Navy are chiefly so filled and therefore left out of account.

The Bureau of Construction, etc., is, like Army engineers, filled from academy cadets. It was not so understood when the table was prepared. But to include it would have raised the Navy average for the 75 officers for $231,100, or $3,081.33 each.

PROMOTION AS DELAYED BY EQUALITY OF AGE.

PROMOTION AS DELAYED BY EQUALITY OF AGE.

The chance of promotion does not depend solely on the number in each grade, but on the comparative age of the officers. If they are older in the higher ranks, and the young are appointed as the old men go out, there will be a fairly steady flow of promotion throughout the service.

But if any such service be suddenly enlarged or otherwise filled with new appointments or promotions of young men, then they are all young together, and promotion of those at the botthey are all young together, and promotion of those at the bottom must wait until the young men at the top die or retire. That is what is called a "hump." It happened at the close of the war in both Army and Navy. The Army was increased to 50,000 men. It was filled up with gallant officers of the war, all young, mostly about 25 years old, and promotion almost stopped. When I came to Congress I was able to find and report in 1896 and thirty years after the war it was true that part only all paior generals and all briggdier generals and all not only all major-generals and all brigadier-generals and all colonels and lieutenant-colonels, but nearly all the majors, half the captains, and some lieutenants (they were in the artillery) had served in the civil war and had been thirty years waiting for promotion, because only young men had been above their heads. That was what was technically called the "hump" in the Army and Navy, and the difficulty was, and is, how to prevent such a "hump."

Congress in 1899 and 1903 increased the personnel of the They increased it so much that there is not left a single Navy. They increased it so much that there is not left a single junior lieutenant who answers to first lieutenant in the Army, but every ensign after three years' service as such becomes a senior lieutenant with the pay of captain in the Army. If the Navy be filled up soon with young graduates from the Naval Academy, there will be a like "hump." What is to be done? What is the ordinary and proper way to prevent a disheartening stagnation in promotion? The misfortune of a hump—that is, of filling the whole list with men of the same age—is that it repeats itself, for they go out, by age or death, much at the same time, and their places are suddenly filled by younger men. Since 1900 almost all the civil war veterans have disappeared from the Army list, and the Army, being 'argely increased since the Spanish war, has been filled with younger men, which will cause another stoppage of promotion as soon as the ranks are full.

The suddenness of the change might have been diminished if the promotion of civil-war veterans one grade on the retired list had been passed in 1896, when first proposed in a report on the case of David S. Gordon. This measure was not adopted until 1904, and meanwhile, after the year 1898, the suddenness of the change in officers was increased by the plan adopted by the President of promoting officers through the grade of brigadier-general, with immediate retirement, so as to give some reward in their old age to men who had served so many years with little promotion and on low pay.

The same conditions prevail in the Navy. The number of officers has been increased by the personnel bill of 1899, section 7 (see Navy Year Book, p. 528), and the appropriation bill of 1903, under "Naval Academy " (Year Book, p. 421), so as to consist of 18 rear-admirals, 70 captains, 112 commanders, 200 lieutenant-commanders, 350 lieutenants, and such total numbers of lieutenants (junior grade) and ensigns as might qualify for such grades under existing law, the increases in the grades of lieutenant-commander and lieutenant to be filled by promotion each year of one-fourth. These numbers are so far in excess of present graduations from the academy that the number of lieutenants answering to captain in the Army is not full, and there are no junior lieutenants whatever answering to lieutenant in the Army. On the other hand, there are some extras in the higher grades under a law allowing promotions in the Spanish war to be additional to those grades.

RETIREMENT AND LONGEVITY PAY.

Several reliefs have been attempted. One is a system of retirement for age. Another is the system of longevity pay, by which we pay a man more, though in the same rank, as years roll on and a family grows about him. Another is the system of compulsory retirement lately adopted in the Navy, which not only lets officers resign with an additional grade, but actually retires a certain number against their will with an additional grade if the promotions do not go fast enough to satisfy the personnel act. I have no time now to discuss which way is the best.

Another plan is the one existing in the Navy of having a large number of men in the upper ranks who, if at any time there are too many officers, used to be put on leave or on waiting orders at reduced pay, or could be put on furlough at about one-quarter pay. This is still the law for the Navy, and when our fleet was small it could keep on the list a large number of officers and give active work only to those who were selected. I can only indicate the difficulties of the subject and its complications to the House at this time. (See Appendix.)

COMMAND.

The real question in the Army and the Navy is not one of money, but of command. The real question in time of peace is how to give young men the training of responsibility. In the short time remaining to me I can indicate the difficulty, but can only touch on how it is to be met. The difficulty, both in the Army and in the Navy, is in the size of the unit of command. mand. We are building nothing but battle ships. We have over a hundred captains or admirals and only thirty-eight battle ships and armored vessels for them to command. The lieutenants get no independent command, nor the lieutenant-commanders. One cure for this would be to have more small ships and to train the Navy officer upon revenue cutters, light-house tenders, and Army transports. If gentlemen will look at the report of the Naval Committee they will find that in every other navy in the world there is a vastly larger proportion of smaller We want them now, not because they are not possible to provide in short order if threatened by war, but because they are not possible to provide in short order if threatened by war, but because they are needed in time of peace in order to give young officers responsibility with small boats before putting them without previous training in charge of a ship that costs $8,000,000.

The United States has 18 battle ships, first class; 12 coast-defense vessels; 8 armored cruisers—38 in all. It also has 5 cruisers averaging from 8,000 to 9,000 tons, 17 averaging a little over 4,000 tons, 22 averaging under 2,000 tons, besides 16 torpedo-boat destroyers, and 32 torpedo boats, and 8 submarines, making 100 unarmored vessels in all.

Great Politic has 200

in all.

Great Britain has 82 armored vessels and 311 unarmored; France has 51 armored vessels and 350 unarmored; Germany has 34 armored and 122 unarmored; Japan has 23 armored and 161 unarmored. The particulars are in the last table annexed to the report on this bill. All these nations have large numbers of smaller vessels, which give practice to young officers, who learn habits of responsibility and command.

mand.

The value of torpedo boats as a coast defense, to keep foreign flects well away, has never been tested by a nation that breeds such men as Cushing, ready to take their lives in their hands for the sake of success. There might be hundreds of such small boats in our harbors or laid up on shore. If we have no naval officers to spare, there are hundreds of tug boat captains and pilots who would show what Americans can do and dare, if a hostile fleet was found within 100 miles. But as our Navy fills up from the enlarged Naval Academy we shall have young officers idle unless we have the smaller craft in which to try and prove the stuff of which each man is made.

In the Army I believe the same principle is to be followed. We are getting large garrisons in brigade posts. I doubt whether I believe in large garrisons, because the captains or the under officers in those garrisons are nothing but mere subordinates, pawns doing the orders of the post commander. I believe in small posts, though I believe in uniting the men of those small posts for study of the science of actual warfare for six months during the summer in large commands of a division or a corps, but in camps and away from the houses and homes which expose our Army, like the armies of the rest of the world, to the danger of garrison dry rot.

CONCLUSION.

Now, Mr. Chairman, only one word. Let no man of the Army or Navy think that Congress either grudges or counts the cost of promotion or pay. Let us be liberal. count in the Navy is less than a quarter of the total appropriation contained in the bill. The pay account in the Army is hardly a quarter of the total appropriations, including those of other bills for fortifications and barracks and quarters. We do not grudge fair pay. The cheapest thing the country can buy is men—cheaper than guns, or forts, or ships, and greater. [Applause.]

APPENDIX.

LONGEVITY PAY.

Officers in the Army and Navy up to the rank of colonel receive 10 per cent additional for every five years' service, not to exceed 40 per cent in all, and with a provision that colonels shall not receive over $4,500 and lieutenant-colonels not over $4,000. A second lieutenant of long standing may thus receive more than a junior captain. It is questionable whether the principle of longevity pay might not be extended so as to make pay dependent wholly on seniority and independent of rank or other conditions, except as some allowances might be made for entertainment, foreign service, or detail to expensive cities. For example, if the pay of a lieutenant were $2,000, increased each year by $100 it would amount after forty years to $6,000, and be very nearly the pay now received with ordinary average promotion, while it would avoid the inequalities between the Army and Navy and the different branches of the line and staff, would enable the officers of regiments to be kept together and prevent the feeling of injustice when the younger men are selected for difficult command. Under such a system there would be no need of so strict an age limit for entrance into the service.

there would be no letter to service.

This is so radical a suggestion that it has been surprising to find that quite a number of officers have welcomed it as a real solution of some, at least, of the inequality and injustice which would result from any system of promotion by selection and result now from inequality in various branches of the service.

at least, of the inequality and injustice which would result from any system of promotion by selection and result now from inequality in various branches of the service.

RETHEMENTS, FTC.

The system of retirement has largely come in since the civil war. Before the war Army officers held their manissions during life, but active work was probably intrusted to room the civil war. The system of the civil war had an equivalent in the system still remaining, by which supernumerary officers can be put on leave or waiting orders, with reduced pay, or half that pay when on furlough, and the Secretary of the Navy could place any officer on furlough, (R. S., 1442, 1556, etc.).

As early as February 28, 1855, there had been a reserved list on leave of absence pay or furlough pay, according to the approval of the President. This system was a naval necessity, because there were often more officers than there were ships.

The system of the war. In August, 1861, not over 7 per cent were authorized to be retired on full pay if incapable of the active service required in the war. In August, 1861, not over 7 per cent were authorized to be retired on full pay if incapable of service. Our July 17, 1866, any officer over 62 years old, or forty-five years in service, might be retired at the discretion of the President; and since that time the officers at 64 years of age must be retired, or, after forty years of service may be retired by the President, or after thirty years, service may be roretired by the President, or after thirty years, service may be roretired by the President, or after thirty years, service may be roretired, and if this be found after mental examination for his properties of the president of their own and the properties of the service with the service and the properties of the service with the service the officer may be retired wholly without pay.

The system is complicated and works sometimes well and sometimes in the service the officer may be retired wholly without pay.

The system is complicated and wo

"SEC. 8. That officers of the line in the grades of captain, commander, and lieutenant-commander may, by official application to the Secretary of the Navy, have their names placed on a list which shall be known as the list of 'applicants for volunteer retirement,' and when, at the end of any fiscal year, the average vacancies for the fiscal years subsequent to the passage of this act above the grade of lieutenant-commander less than twenty, above the grade of lieutenant less than twenty-nine, and above the grade of lieutenant less than twenty-nine, and above the grade of lieutenant less than twenty-nine, and above the grade of lieutenant less than twenty-nine, and above the grade of lieutenant less than forty, the President may, in the order of the rank of the applicants, place a sufficient number on the retired list with the rank and three-fourths the sea pay of the next higher grade, as now existing, including the grade of commodore, to cause the aforesaid vacancies for the fiscal year then being considered."

By section 9, if volunteer retirements do not create these average vacancies, a retiring board selects and retires not more than five captains, four commanders, four lieutenant-commanders, and two lieutenants in order if possible to make up the number.

Thirteen a year would sweep out the 84 rear-admirals and captains in less than seven years; 20 a year would dispose of the 196 admirals, captains, and commanders in less than fourteen years; 29 a year would renew the whole list of 396 admirals, captains, commanders, and lieutenant-commanders in less than fourteen years; 29 a year would renew the whole list of 396 admirals, captains, commanders, and lieutenant-commanders in less than fourteen years at the minimum of 29 vacancies would make him a lieutenant-commander, and not quite fourteen years more would take him out of the service. This allows a severe selection to be maintained, while it gives those who are retired nothing to do and an advanced grade, with a retired pay about equal to the active pay t

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Parker] may have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Coal and transportation: Purchase of coal and other fuel for steamers' and ships' use, and other equipment purposes, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling the same, and for the general maintenance of naval coaling depots and coaling plants, $3,750,000.

By Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, in line 9, page 2, after the word "dollars," the following:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for coal in the Philippine Islands, except for coal purchased from the lowest bidder: And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the transportation of coal to the Philippine Islands, except to the lowest bidders for such transportation in satismy vessels and to the lowest bidders for such transportation in sailing vessels, whether such steam and sailing vessels shall be American or foreign."

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN, Mr. Chairman, mon, that

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, upon that amendment I wish to say that it will save, in my judgment, to the Government in the course of each twelve months many thousands of dollars. Now we are required to transport our coal in American bottoms unless the President finds the rate unreasonable and excessive. The rates that were paid under the new law of 1904 during the year of 1905 were 47 per cent to American vessels in excess of the rate paid to foreign vessels, and in 1906 51 per cent in excess to American vessels over foreign vessels. Now, this practical excess of 50 per cent in favor of American vessels amounted to a subsidy in their favor of near $3 per ton. Yet notwithstanding that preferential in favor of American vessels, the coal-carrying fleet of American vessels has not been increased. To-day the Government finds it impossible to secure enough American vessels to transport our coal to the Philippines, even when it is willing to give $3 or $3.50 more per ton than to foreign vessels.

No gentleman ought to oppose this on the ground that it is contrary to any American industry, because under it in all probability we will still use American coal. We can buy American coal in the Philippine Islands for about $1 a ton cheaper than we can buy European coal, provided we let the Navy buy it after being transported in foreign bottoms. You can buy American coal there to-day for the price at which the American steamers offer to transport the coal. We can save the original cost of the coal by giving the Secretary power to buy American

The 1904 law has cost this Government, through the Navy Department, thousands of dollars from year to year without bringing any benefit to the American people. No one can oppose this amendment on the ground that coal is an article of which we have a great surplus for which this country ought to pay a bounty for its transportation abroad, because this very winter we are having a coal famine and there has been a lack of the necessary American coal throughout various sections of this land. There is a shortage of cars handling coal, we understand. You can not oppose this amendment under the plea that it will throw labor out of employment, because there is a shortage of labor in almost every section of this land.

You can only defeat this amendment by adhering to the spirit "stand-patism" that will contravene the best interests of the people; that will help no coal miner, nor shipowner, nor laborer, nor any other class of our citizens, in my judgment. The Department desires relief from the law of 1904. The Department desires rener from the law of 1304. The Department, we are told, will next year need 150,000 tons of coal in Cavite, in the Philippines. According to the last offers made to the Department we can, if permitted to do so, buy American coal there for $7.25 or $7.50 a ton, while we can not secure transportation of the coal in American steamers for less than $7.50 after we buy it here at a cost of $2.75 per ton. Under the present law every ton of coal bought here and transported in American steamers costs us at Cavite from 30 to 40 per cent more than our coal there will cost us under this amendment.

The time of the gentleman has expired. The CHAIRMAN. Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a word upon is question. On April 28, 1904, an act was passed providing this question. that naval supplies, including coal, should be shipped in Ameri can bottoms, unless the President shall find the rates of freight charged by such vessels are excessive and unreaschable.

Since that act was passed we have shipped some of our coal in American bottoms, but the major part of it has been shipped in foreign bottoms. The excess which has been paid to American ships in 1905 amounted to $133,000, and in 1906 to $63,000, making in all up to the present time, since the passage of the act, an excess of $197,184. Now, this year the situation is that it is almost impossible to get American bottoms to carry this coal, and it is very difficult also to get coal anywhere, and the Department has made a very full statement of the condition in a pamphlet, which I have before me, and which I propose to put in the RECORD. They recommend that they be permitted to buy coal where it can be bought cheapest without being restricted to its transportation in American bottoms.

Washington, D. C., February 5, 1907.

My Dear Mr. Foss: In compliance with your request over the telephone yesterday I inclose herewith additional data with reference to shipment of coal to Manila since the operation of the law requiring shipments to be made in American bottoms. This data is based on shipments to Manila for the reason that few shipments have been made in other directions in either American or foreign bottoms, since shipments to the other principal outlying stations are governed by the coastwise shipping law, so called, and foreign bottoms are therefore out of the question. It has therefore been necessary to purchase Cardiff coal, which can be had delivered, including duty, at rates about equal to the rates demanded for transportation only in American ships, to which must be added the cost of the coal. The coal, of course, is shipped in foreign bottoms, but is not shipped by the Government, but purchased at the station desired.

I shall be glad to furnish any additional information desired.

Very truly, yours,

WM. S. Cowtree

No coal has been shipped to Cavite during the fiscal year 1907. A contract has just been entered into for the transportation in foreign bottoms of 10,000 tons at $4.70 and 40,00 tons at a rate equivalent to $4.50. It is anticipated that 50,000 tons additional will be engaged during the year, and it is hoped and expected that a rate of $4.25 to $4.40 will be obtained.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, BUREAU OF EQUIPMENT, Washington, D. C., February 4, 1907.

Bureau of Factiment,

Washington, D. C., February 4, 1907.

My Dear Mr. Foss: In compliance with your request I forward herewith a memorandum prepared in my office bearing on the operation of the law requiring that vessels of the United States, or belonging to the United States, and no others, shall be employed in the transportation by sea of coal, etc., for use of the Army and Navy. (Public—No. 198.)

A comparison of the rates the Government has been required to pay for transporting its coal in American bottoms with those paid for the same service in foreign bottoms will demonstrate how expensive this law has proven to the Government and how expensive it will continue to prove as long as it remains in force. This memorandum will also show that however desirable it may be to ship coal in American bottoms, the number of such ships available for the business do not begin to compare with the requirements.

It will be shown by this memorandum that though practically all American vessels available for the transportation of coal for the Government have been chartered to transport coal to Manila, the supply has been short of the demand in excess of 150,000 tons. In addition to this, it has been necessary to purchase many thousand tons of Welsh coal to supply other distant stations, such as Mare Island, Puget Sound, Honolulu, Sitka, Tutuia, etc.

You will also note that in addition to the rate of transportation demanded, additional concessions must be made American ships in the way of supplying ballast. Whether this adds to the cost of the coal to the Government does not matter; certainly it provides an additional income for the ship.

The law has been in effect two and one-half years. To the Bureau, it appears without question, it has been demonstrated that there are not sufficient American ships to carry out the intent of the law, and its operation is detrimental to the interests of the Government, and particularly so to the Navy Department.

I hope this memorandum may serve your purpose. It has been hurriedly drawn,

Hon. George E. Foss, M. C., House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

TRANSPORTATION OF COAL FOR THE BUREAU OF EQUIPMENT, NAVY DE-PARTMENT.

1. The law entitled "An act to require the employment of vessels of the United States for public purposes" (Public—No. 1985, requiring vessels of the United States, or belonging to the United States, and no others, shall be employed in the transportation by sea of coal, etc., for use of the Army or Navy, unless the President shall find that the rates of freight charged by such vessels are excessive and unreasonable, was approved April 28, 1904, and became effective June 28, 1904.

2. The last call for proposals for vessels to transport coal to Cavite. P. I., prior to the operation of the act referred to above, was sent out May 24, 1904, in the form of a circular letter to twenty-three different concerns in the United States, and resulted in chartering three British steamers, carrying a total of 12,210½ tons, at an average cost of $4.6325 per ton freight.

3. The first call for proposals under the operation of the law referred to was made by public advertisement October 25, 1904. Proposals were requested for transporting 25,000 tons of coal to the naval station, Cavite, in American vessels only. In addition to the public advertisement a special notice was sent to twenty-one shipowners, agents, or brokers, whose names were a matter of record in the Bureau of Equipment. Proposals were received as follows. It will be noted that though foreign tonnage was not requested considerable was offered.

11. The accumulation of a stock of coal at Cavite having been assured, it was decided the part of wisdom to take advantage of any or all American vessels that might possibly be available in the near future, and on February 15, 1905, another advertisement was inserted, requesting proposals to transport 40,000 tons to Cavite in American vessels only. This advertisement was supplemented by special notices sent to 130 shipowners, agents, brokers, etc. Sixteen offers were received as follows:

12. It will be noted that although proposals for transportation in American bottoms only were distinctly requested, but 18,000 tons of American ships were offered, while foreign ships, approximating 240,000 tons, were offered. All offers of American ships were accepted.

13. The fifth general call for proposals was made July 8, 1905, not by advertisement, but by circular letter sent to 129 shipowners, agents, or brokers throughout the United States. The result of this call was as follows:

All bona fide offers for American sailing vessels were accepted. The offers for American steamers were not accepted, but $7 per ton was offered, which was declined.

14. No other advertisement for proposals was issued until December 6, 1906, but, based on individual offers from owners or agents, a British steamer was chartered at $4.40 per ton, one at $4.25 per ton, and three at $4 per ton, while ten American sailing vessels were chartered at prices ranging from $5.50 to $6.50 per ton. During the present fiscal year, July 1 to date, no shipments have been made to Cavite.

15. Some of the American vessels shown as being offered under the various requests for proposals heretofore detailed were offered while their acceptance on a previous offer was already under consideration. The number of American ships that have been offered to the Bureau were therefore actually less in number than the foregoing statement shows.

were therefore actually less in number than the loregoing states shows.

16. Since the act under consideration went into effect it is not believed that any American sailing vessel that has been offered for Cavite at $6.50 or less has been rejected, unless they have been required by the Bureau for other destinations or unless the Bureau's funds were in such a state as to make rejection necessary, nor has any American steamer that has been offered at $7.50 or less been rejected, except in the one instance of two steamers, total 9,000 tons, offered at $7.50. The Bureau offered $7 per ton, which offer was declined by the owner.

17. Despite the fact that practically all American tonnage offered has been accepted and that 104,400 tons of coal have been shipped in foreign bottoms since the operation of the act referred to, the stock of coal at Cavite, which on January 1, 1906, was approximately 104,000 tons, has been reduced to 57,800 tons on January 1, 1907.

18. On December 6, 1906, an advertisement was issued calling for proposals to transport 50,000 tons of coal to Cavite under the following items:

It will be noted that in these proposals but one American vessel was offered, and that a sailing vessel of 5,000 tons capacity, at $6.50, due for cargo about April 1, 1907. This ship will be considered later.

19. By authority of the Department a contract has been entered into for transporting 10,000 tons in foreign bottoms at $4.70 per ton, coal to be supplied by the Bureau, and for 40,000 tons of American coal delivered at Cavite in foreign bottoms at $7.25 per ton, including the cost of coal, transportation, insurance, etc.

for shipping coal to Manila, the Bureau is required to consider American vessels only in the transportation of American coal to Honolulu. to San Francisco, and to other outlying United States Government possessions.

22. Failing to secure American bottoms for such shipments, it became necessary to adopt the only other alternative, of importing coals of foreign origin, principally coal from Wales, in foreign ships. The Government is therefore practically at the combined mercy of the British coal trade and owners of foreign ships, and must pay whatever price may, be demanded of it, however high it may be considered. Efforts have been made for more than a week to secure one cargo of Welsh coal for delivery at the navy-yard, Mare Island. The lowest offer made, and which must be accepted, provided the Bureau is successful in its efforts to do so, is $11 per ton for a second or third grade coal. The last price paid was $6.80 per ton delivered for coal of the first quality.

23. During the fiscal year 1903 approximately 30,000 tons of Welsh coal was purchased for delivery to the navy-yard, Mare Island. For a part of this $7.08 was paid and for the remainder $7.13. In 1904 and 1905 no shipments of Cardiff coal were made, but small quantities of coal mined on the Pacific coast were purchased as required, principally for yard use. This is not good coal for use on naval vessels, and is expensive to use at the prices paid. In 1906 approximately 40,000 tons of Welsh coal were purchased, delivered at the navy-yard, Mare Island, for a part of which $6.80 was paid, for the remainder $7.14 was paid.

24. During the current fiscal year, owing to a preference of American vessels for San Francisco as a point of destination, four American seamer at $7.50 per ton. Efforts to secure other American steamers at this rate have failed, owing to their inability to obtain return cargoes. These rates are for transportation only, to which must be added the cost of the coal, at $2.75 per ton.

25. There-have been no shipments of American coal stated before, is not suitable for use on war vessels, principally on account of its comparatively low steaming value and its smoke-pro-account of its comparatively low steaming value and its smoke-producing qualities.

26. The American sailing vessels that have been chartered to carry coal to Manila number twelve, and the American steamers five. The sailing vessels, as a rule, are outbound for Honolulu and are what may be termed the sugar fleet. In most cases, in addition to the rate paid, the ship must be allowed to retain about one-fourth of the cargo carried to Manila to ballast the ship to Honolulu. This results in a practical saving of about 50 cents per ton on the cargo capacity of the ship, and must be added to the rate actually paid for transportation in calculating the value of the business to the ship. Furthermore, shipowners now require that not only ballast be supplied them to final destination, but require that ballast be supplied them from point of last discharge to the point the coal is to be loaded, should the latter point be distant from the former.

require that not only ballast be supplied them to final destination, but require that ballast be supplied them from point of last discharge to the point the coal is to be loaded, should the latter point be distant from the former.

27. Of the American steamers but five have been chartered since the law in question went into effect, and these five represent but two owners, two ships being owned by one concern. Lewis Luckenbach, and three by another, the Atlantic Transport Line. No charter of an American steamer may be expected at less than $7.50 per ton, the rate paid for the Luckenbach ships. Two of the other three were secured at $7. but the experience gained by their owners was such as to cause them to demand $7.50 for the third, which was paid; and though recently they have been seeking the business, it must be on their own terms, practically. They want 20 more charters at $7.50. In 1905 they offered one of their sl-ips at $8 per ton, agreeing to refund to the Government 50 cents per ion provided they were "able to secure for the homeward voyage a cargo the freight upon which would pay all expenses from the time the ship finishes discharging at Manila until free of her homeward cargo at the United States port, plus 5 per cent on the value of the ship during this period." This company admits its willingness and desire to keep its four large freighters in the coal-carrying business, but by the foregoing indicate their inability to insure return freights, thus necessitating the Government to pay on the outward trip the operating expenses of the in and out voyage and a fair margin of profit.

28. Again in 1905, after demonstrating their inability to use the ships in the Manila coal-carrying trade at a rate fair to the Government which would net them a fair margin of profit on the business, they made a proposition to charter two of their fleet to the Government by the year at a stipulated rate per ton per month on the dead-weight capacity of the ships.

29. Of the salling vessels chartered, i. e., twelve, six wer

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSS. Yes Mr. MANN. Th This is a limitation upon the appropriation.

Mr. FOSS. For this year. Mr. MANN. The law pro Mr. MANN. The law provides that they must follow the provisions of the statute. This bill limits the appropriation so they can not follow the provisions of the statute. If this remains in the form in which it is proposed, it simply makes your entire appropriation ineffective.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, I will say that this would have been subject to a point of order, according to the rulings, as I recollect, of the Chair last year, with which, however, I did not agree.

Mr. MANN. This is a mere limitation now. Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. This will be a limitation upon it, and they can expend this appropriation in accordance with the limitation.

As I understood from the reading of the amend-Mr. MANN. ment, it said that no part of the appropriation should be used unless so and so is done, and that means that unless so and so s done contrary to the statutes of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. But I think this provision in this appropriation will supersede the general law on the subject as to this appropriation. As I said, it would have been subject to a point of order under the former ruling, but I take it that no Secretary of the Navy could be charged with vio-lating the law when in expending a fund he followed the provisions attaching to the specific appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I did not think the gentleman's amendment was subject to the point of order, whatever the ruling on it may have been. It is a limitation in form expressly, and if it had been put in a positive form undoubtedly the point of order would have been made upon it by some one, or at least reserved upon it. It is expressly in the form of a limitation, and if it be a mere limitation the result is simply to make the total appropriation unavailable.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I do not agree with the gentleman that the appropriation will be unavailable. But, in furtherance of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], chairman of the committee, I desire to say in this connection that on December 6, 1906, the Department advertised for proposals to transport 50,000 tons of coal to Cavite under the following items:

Item A. Transportation in American steamers.

Then it gives several others, and the statement is made that, in addition to the advertisement, special notices were sent to 133 shipowners, agents, brokers, agents of coal supplies, and so forth, and not a single proposition was received from an American steamer to transport any part of that coal, and only one offer from a sailing vessel, and that for only 5,000 tons.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Before the gentleman sits down I want to ask him a question.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Certainly.
Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. If that amendment prevails, this Government may buy coal from any country it sees fit?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. In the Philippines. It is limited to the Philippines.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. But this Department may buy coal of any country it pleases and is not required to buy coal in this country. Is that the effect of the amendment?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. That is the effect of the amendment

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. You could not convince me to vote for that if you talked four days

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. But in response to the advertisement that I called attention to there are bidders who offered to deliver American coal and to sell American coal there for $1 a ton less than they can get any foreign coal there.

Mr. HULL. Then, what is the object of this?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. It permits them to buy where they please.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I should like to have about three minutes more on that point.

By unanimous consent the time of Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN was extended three minutes

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. The object of that provision is to give power to the Navy Department to buy its coal there as cheap as it can; but, as a matter of fact, according to this report we can buy American coal there for a dollar a ton less than we can buy any foreign coal. According to these offers for American coal delivered at Cavite, the offer of one bidder for 50,000 tons was $8.80, and of one bidder 50,000 tons at $7.50 under certain conditions and $7.25 under other conditions. Cardiff coal delivered at Cavite—that is foreign coal, as I under-stand—the cheapest price of that was for 20,000 tons at $8.71 and 20,000 tons at $8.81, which is more than a dollar a ton higher than the lowest offer for 50,000 tons of American coal. I take that this Department has given us full information, after full advertisement, not only through the press, but by the various circulars and letters sent out to the coal dealers and agents,

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statements of the chairman of the committee, I do not have any desire to strenuously oppose this amendment, and especially in view of the recommendation of the Chief of the Bureau. I mean if it conforms to the wishes of the committee, but I do desire to correct what I deem is some error in the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN] regarding the effect of this law which authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to transport this coal in American bottoms where the prices are not exorbitant or extravagant,

If the gentleman from North Carolina had looked over the reports of the Chief of the Bureau for a period of years be-fore the passage of this law, when all of it was carried in foreign bottoms, he would have observed what it costs this Government to carry its coal from the Atlantic coast to the Pa-From the year 1899 down to the year 1906 cific possessions. the lowest price for the transportation of coal was in the year 1906, save the two years of 1903 and 1904, before the passage of the law which the gentleman from North Carolina now declaims against. So that the effect of this law, according to the statement of the Chief of that Bureau, must have been beneficial in stating to these owners of foreign bottoms that no combination as to price would be accepted, but that those who owned American vessels might bid lower, and hence their prices man also made a statement that the price charged by the were reduced from that which formerly obtained. The gentleowners of American vessels was practically $7.50 a ton. The Chief of the Bureau says it was $6.04 a ton. Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I have these tables here, and on page 460, which is a part of Document No. 68 of our commit-tee, it says that no charter of an American steamer may be expected at less than $7.50 a ton, the rate paid for the Luckenback ships, and he says that they want no more at $7.50. Upon that same pamphlet, page 459, it says that in 1903 we carried 41,000 tons of coal at $4.77 a ton. That was in foreign bottoms, and in 1904

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Oh, I am familiar with all those figures. I am not answering the argument of the Chief of the Bureau or the argument of the gentleman from North Carolina save by the facts as reported by the Department, which certainly can not be contradicted.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. The statement that I read from is dated February 5, 1907, just a week ago to-day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will remember that the Secretary of the Navy, in his annual report last year, stated that the only effect of that law was to create embarrassment, annoyance, and expense to the Department.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I do not know that those were the exact words, but I remember something in that line.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think his words were even more em-

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I want to state for the information of the committee that when the Department carried its coal in foreign bottoms it paid $6.46 a ton on an average, but last year it was only $6.04, or 42 cents difference.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. That was in sailing vessels.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, ordinarily I would hesitate to break into a discussion on an appropriation bill in the preparation of which I have had no responsibility, but it seems to me that this amendment is a very radical departure from the entire history of this country, and it is a proposition to break down one of the restrictions and safeguards for the American people trading with themselves or those people dependent upon them for their government. It seems to me it is a mistake in an amendment of this character to adopt it in the Committee of the Whole in this way without consideration. The Committee on Naval Affairs evidently did not favor this matter or it would have reported it. It was before the committee evidently or the hearings the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN] has quoted could not be so full as he claims them

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.
Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. This main document that we have on this subject was made after the chairman of the committee had reported this bill to the House, in which a review of the entire situation was had, showing the prices we have paid, showing the situation we are now in—that we are unable to get sufficient American steamers

Mr. HULL. Well, it was not considered by the committee. My understanding of the present law is that the coal has to be carried in American bottoms if it can be carried for the same price as in foreign bottoms.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. If it is not exorbitant. Mr. HULL. Yes. We have in our coastwise trade a provi-Mr. HULL. Yes. We have in our coastwise trade. No sion of law that it has to be carried in American bottoms. No Philippines, in one sense, is our coastwise trade, and, in my judgment, should be made absolutely under the same provisions as the rest of this country. We pay all the expenses of their administration; we are responsible for good government there just as much as we are on the mainland of this continent, and, in my judgment, we should preserve to our own people all of the advantages of trading there that we possibly can preserve to them. There is now before this Congress the proposition to aid our marine by subsidies in the nature of additional compensation in carrying the mails, and yet with that proposition before us we come in here and propose to strike down one safeguard and open to the commerce of the world trade with the Philippine Islands. I am opposed to the proposition. I do not believe it is right, and I hope it will not be adopted, even if the Committee on Naval Affairs should be for it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understand the gentleman to say that the putting of these navigation laws against the Philippines practically made them a part of our coast line.

Mr. HULL. I say they ought to be. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It makes them that in effect, does it not, if it limits the carrying to our own ships?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman think we ought to put the coastwise navigation laws against any island and make it a part of our coast line and at the same time keep a high tariff against its products?

Mr. HULL. No; I do not. There ought not to be any tariff between any part of this country, whether you call it the United States proper or one of its dependencies. I am in favor of wherever the flag goes having free trade in all parts of the nited States. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman under-United States.

stand that if this amendment is adopted this Government has permission to buy its coal from any nation?

I understand that, and I am opposed to the whole proposition.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, this provision applies only to the appropriation of this year, and we are in a peculiar situation. So far as the law is concerned with reference to American bottoms, that law was passed only two years ago. Up to that time we could buy our coal wherever we saw fit, whether it was shipped in foreign bottoms or any other kind of bottoms, but the law was passed two years ago, and it has had this effect, and we are in this situation to-day; and so far as I am concerned I shall support the gentleman from North Carolina. want to say to the gentleman, my colleague on the committee, that I think I am as intensely an American as he is. I would like to see everything which is consumed by the sailors on board our ships American. I would like to see the coal American; I would like to see everything American; but I want to say to him that notwithstanding that this law has been in effect it does not preclude our country from buying foreign coal wherever it sees fit to-day, even for our home stations, because here during the last year, 1906, approximately 40,000 tons of Welsh coal were purchased and delivered at the navy-yard at Mare Island. We are buying foreign coal everywhere, wherever

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I suggest to my colleague on the committee it is under stress they buy that coal, because they can not get our own.

Mr. FOSS. Of course they buy American coal when they can. Mr. CRUMPACKER. Allow me to make the suggestion that we enacted a law several years ago extending the coastwise laws to the Philippine Archipelago, and we could not get American boats enough to accommodate the trade and we were compelled to postpone the operation of that law until two years from next April, because there were not American boats enough to take care of the trade. Now, if we enforce the present law and require all coal to be carried in American bottoms what will be the outcome? We could not get American boats enough to provide for the commerce of the islands.

Mr. HULL. Do you understand coal is now carried in American bottoms?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not under this provision.

Mr. HULL. Independent of this provision?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The law provides that coal must be carried in American boats unless the rates are "extortionate." That word "extortionate"—

Mr. HULL. Unreasonable.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is an elastic word, and it is difficult to apply and fix a standard.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. You may.
Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. You were speaking about the law extending the coastwise laws to the Philippines for two years on account of the shortage of American ships. When you had that bill did you give any hearings to anybody? Was not that bill brought in here and put through the House in about forty-eight hours, without opportunity for any of the shipping interests of this country to be heard?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know about that. I know the Committee on the Merchant Marine of the House had before it a bill containing identically the same provisions, and the War Department and the Philippine Commission insisted—repeatedly insisted—upon it, and stated that if the law went into force the result would be disastrous if not destructive to commerce between the mainland of this country and the Philippine

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman dodges the question. I asked if it is not the fact that the law was introduced here, brought in from the committee, and passed through without a hearing inside of forty-eight hours.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There was no formal hearing before the committee, because the matter had been thoroughly investi-gated and recommendations came to us from the War Department and the Philippine Commission and-

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I take issue with the gentleman when he says that there are no American ships

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this is a very remarkable proposition for the chairman of this committee to agree to. It is the first time that I have known, certainly since I have been here, of the proposal of a measure allowing the world to compete with American ships in carrying coal for our own Navy. In the first place, as already indicated by the gentleman from Washington, it is an injustice to the American shipping which we are trying to aid at this very moment. A bill for that purpose is just now brought here before the House bill which I understand meets the approval of a majority of this side of the House, and certainly ought, although it does not go far enough; yet at this moment we propose to allow the shipping of the world to come in here and compete against American bottoms

Mr. HULL. On Government work.

Mr. WALDO. Yes; on Government work. Such a proposition seems to me to be remarkable. Aside from that question, it is a very foolish thing to put our Navy in the hands of foreign shipowners, to leave thus to foreign nations the power to say whether we shall have coal enough to run our own battle ships, Foreign nations will have the power then to say whether we shall have coal enough, what kind of coal we shall have, or whether we shall coal our Navy at all. It seems to me a most remarkable thing for us to think for one moment of allowing the shipping of the world to compete for the furnishing of supplies of coal necessary before our Navy can operate at all. It would be very much better for this Government to build colliers to carry coal to our Navy in the Philippines rather than to depend upon foreign ships, no matter how cheaply they can be hired. If the gentleman is opposed to allowing such merchant ships as we have do the Government business, then certainly he ought to favor an appropriation to build colliers so that the Government can itself carry the coal necessary for the

I suppose if we were to have a war with England those favoring this amendment would permit English ships to bid for the carrying of coal to our war ships and to follow our ships from place to place with necessary coal, because it would be so much That will be the next step, and it will certainly be a natural step if we allow the world to bid for the carrying of coal to our Navy in the Philippines. If the policy of the proposed amendment is to be followed, in a little while we will not have any merchant ships at all to carry coal there or anywhere, and the result will be that we shall have to depend on France, or England, or Germany to furnish colliers to follow our war ships and coal them, in time of war as well as in time of peace, else we can not get any coal at all. For the protection of the last remnant of American shipping and the saving of our Navy itself from future disaster, I hope if there is any patriotic American here he will vote against any such amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in the last session of Con-ress I attempted to have an amendment adopted that would limit the price paid to the owners of American ships for carrying coal. Some of the owners of the ships that go from ports on the Atlantic coast live in the district represented by my colleague [Mr. Waldo] and some in the district represented by myself. My action was based, however, upon the recommendation made by the Secretary of the Navy in his report for 1905, in which he said that the result of the law requiring supplies to be carried in American vessels "was only to cause trouble and expense to the Government, with no offsetting advantage." also stated that the law did not promote the building of any American ship or the training of any American sailor. The only good it did was to benefit the owners of the ships, and it had largely increased the cost of transporting coal.

I am opposed to the continuance of any law that will permit an American citizen to hold the Government by the throat and extort money from it in the transporting of supplies required by the Government in distant places. The excuse that has been given for these exorbitant prices has been that the American shipowners could not obtain cargoes back at remunerative

At the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Loud], a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, several weeks ago I wired one of the largest freight brokers in the city of New York, and he sent me a message saying the rates for the last steamer that arrived in New York from Manila were, for hemp, 45s. a ton, and for sugar, 27s. 6d. a ton of 2,240 pounds. The prices on returned cargoes are largely in excess of the prices paid on outgoing cargoes. Under the existing law the President has the right, if the bids of the owners of American ships are excessive or unreasonable, to permit the carrying of coal in foreign bottoms; but, as I pointed out at the last session, the President is charged with a multitude of duties, and it is impossible for him to give his attention to these matters. We should permit the Department, when it finds itself confronted by a few men controlling the few American ships putting up unreasonably and unfairly the price of transporting coal, to ship the coal in other ships at a reasonable price.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand the gentleman to say that the President under existing law has the power to regulate the method of shipment of coal either in American or foreign bottoms, but that his duties were so numerous he might not have his attention called to the character of his work. If that be true, is it not possible for the Secretary of the Navy, or somebody acting for the Secretary of the Navy, to call the attention of the President to the discrimination which was being practiced against the Government for American shipping?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Secretary of the Navy did call the President's attention to it. His request that the law be repealed was contained in his annual report to the President for the year 1905, and he urged that the law be repealed because it resulted only in expense and trouble to the Government. the President is too busy to take up a trifling matter like that, particularly as it arises upon each shipment, but which involves in a year an additional expense of three hundred to four hundred thousand dollars to the Government, it is very easy for this House in its deliberations to give a little attention to the matter and to save that money to the Government. The Secretary of the Navy pointed out—and I will say this for the benefit of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor]—that, regardless of his opinion as to the advisability of making appropriations for subsidies for ships, this law should be repealed, because it did not help to build ships or to train American sailors.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this proposition upon the general principles so well stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Waldo]. I am opposed to it also because it seems from the figures submitted by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Loudenslager] that the present law instead of increasing the price of coal or the price of transportation has actually reduced the price of transportation, so that coal is now secured in the Philippines for Government use at lower prices than before.

I am opposed to it for the further reason that this important proposition has not been submitted to or considered by the Naval Committee, and therefore we have not the benefit of a report, either unanimous or of the majority of that committee. The committee itself seem to be divided upon it here. I am opposed to it, too, for the further reason that there does not seem to have arisen any emergency requiring this deviation from our present principle of American bottoms for American transportation of American coal for the use of the American Navy. It is very singular that if there is such an emergency it did not arise until after this naval bill was reported to this

I am opposed to it for the further reason that the amendment in the present form would nullify the appropriation so far as the supply of coal to the Philippines is concerned. now a law providing how coal shall be purchased, by whom it shall be purchased, and how it shall be shipped to the Philippines. This proposed amendment, instead of repealing that law and enacting a new one, says that the Secretary of the Navy shall not proceed to use any portion of this appropriation provided in the bill unless he violates that law. impossible for the Secretary of the Navy to expend money for the purchase of coal so far as the Philippine Islands are concerned. An important measure like this ought not to be sprung upon us, without a committee report, at a time when, under the five-minute rule, we have no opportunity for general debate.

In the event of war the United States Navy would be in a bad way if it had to depend for coal upon foreign contracts for foreign coal to be transported in foreign bottoms,

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, want one moment to reply further to the statement that was made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] in regard to the bill extending the time of the taking effect of the coastwise laws and to say a few words as to why American ships are unable to carry freight to the Philippines. The law of which the gentleman spoke, extending the time of the coast-wise law, according to my recollection, was introduced into this House, was referred to his committee, and called up here within forty-eight hours. I know that when I went to inquire of the gentleman about the bill it was ready to be heard, upon that very morning.

Now, the difficulty about shipping over to Manila has been brought about by that very measure of extension of the time of the coastwise laws, because American ships can not get freight coming in this direction, and the reason of it is that there is a combination over in Manila between the British merchants and foreign ships, and the moment an American vessel goes into the harbor of Manila they reduce the rate sufficient to make it unprofitable for an American vessel to go there.

What has been the result? The result of it has been that American vessels have stopped going to Manila. The two large Hill vessels, carrying 20,000 tons each, no longer go to Manila for that very reason; and within the last thirty days three of the Boston Steamship Company's vessels have stopped going to Manila, and now we have only two American vessels running regularly to the Philippines. And now you propose to take away even the two that are left and depend upon foreign vessels to carry not only coal but our soldiers and ammunition. If the time for the going into effect of the coastwise law had not been extended for two years, American vessels would be carrying this freight, and there would be to-day eight instead of two American vessels going to the Philippines. It seems to me that it is a very unusual proposition that this Government should not only carry our coal to our Navy in foreign vessels, but buy that coal for our Navy from the foreigner when we can get it cheaper than we can get it at home. For one I am not willing to subscribe to that proposition. And I am opposed to this legislation, because you are only going one step further toward destroying the only American ships we have left.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Is the gentleman from Washington of the impression that these ships which are in the regular lines carry coal?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No, sir; no coal goes from the Pacific coast to the Philippines

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. They start on the Chesapeake and go there. And that is what you adopt if you adopt this amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am not talking about the Pacific coast, because no coal goes from there. I am speaking from the interest I take in the subject generally. I am interested in shipping and in the merchant marine, and I am interested in the American people having their own supplies carried in American ships. I have no interest in the subject in so far as my own district is concerned.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have about five minutes to speak on this subject. I did not intend to discuss the main questions that are involved in the proposition of this amendment at this time. The gentleman complained that the Government of the United States in the matter of its transportation has violated and practically nullified the move-ment which would undoubtedly have resulted in the complete competition between our own coastwise ships and those of our competitors in foreign bottoms. It is a poor time now to do this. Suppose that this threatened us suppose a case now. trouble with the oriental countries should come. What are we to do with our Navy and without naval supplies? We have not men enough to man two-thirds of our Navy to-day; and we propose to turn over the furnishing of the coal to our Navy to contractors carrying foreign flags. England carries a flag which is in treaty alliance with Japan. English ships would undoubtedly be the successful competitors for the carrying of this coal.

We are expending a vast sum of money to develop our own coal production in the Philippine Islands; but pending that we are seeking to destroy the possibility of the growth of American competition. How can you expect American competition if you keep gigging backward and forward your statutes in regard to the coastwise trade? There was being developed rapidly successful competition, and undoubtedly it would have been in the field to-day if it had not been for the change in the statute of our own country which was enacted by the last Congress. Now, the difference, as shown by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Loudenslager], between the cost last year and the cost under the former condition of things is a matter of so small importance that it seems to me that while the President has full power to prevent extortion against the Treasury of the United States by high prices, while he has a complete remedy in his own hands, while these developments are going on, it is unwise for us to drive out of this business by an enactment of Congress any American ships that might see fit to carry this trade in competition with foreign bottoms. I shall have a good deal more to say about some features of this matter. We have now no ships running to Manila. We have not a single over-sea ship under a system of regular salling that carries her to the Philippin Laborate at the state of the Son week depend and the same and ippine Islands at stated times. So we must depend upon our coastwise ships being diverted from their own trade and going into that trade, and with the power in the hands of the President to prevent extortion I can see no reason why this blow should here be struck.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask in this connection a question of the chairman of the committee. A year or two ago we passed a bill appropriating $50,000 (I think that was the amount) to buy out a coal company that had some rights in the Philippine Islands; and we were assured that that would furnish us very soon a supply of coal and solve this coal question. It seems to me this would be a very proper time for the chairman of the committee to tell us what has come of that venture, how much it has cost, what progress has been made, and what success, if any, has been attained.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. And in reply to the gentleman from Iowa I can read what Admiral Cowles said about that:

Mr. Kitchin. There has been a good deal said about the development of some coal fields on a near-by island?

Admiral Cowles. Yes, sir; they have not any coal out there yet. They talk about it a good deal, and they wanted us to use it. We tried some of it and found it had too much sulphur in it, and that the carbon was low, and it was not coal that we could use without injuring the boilers. There is coal in Borneo, in the Philippines, and in China. There is also coal in Japan, but it is not good, except the Yakaido coal. The Japanese use the latter themselves, and will not let you have it. It is said that there is good coal in Alaka, and I wish they would mine it, but they have not yet got communication down to Resurrection Bay to get it to market. Coal is much needed on the Pacific coast just now, and dealers would gladly buy all the Government has stored out there at rates much in excess of what we paid for it. They recently offered us $10 a ton, and it cost us about $7 to get there.

paid for it. The state of the s

Mr. LACEY. I understand that, but what I should like to know is what has become of this coal speculation that we went into?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. That is not under the jurisdiction of the Naval Committee.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think I can give the gentleman some information on that subject. We appropriated $50,000 to buy out a couple of coal leases on the island of Batan. We made no appropriation authorizing the Government to develop the coal deposits at all. The Committee on Insular Affairs reported a bill to the House, giving the Secretary of War authority to lease the mines under certain conditions, but the House refused to pass the bill. We own the coal mines, but there is no appropriation authorizing their development, and no authority conferred upon the Secretary of War to do anything in connection with the

Mr. LACEY. Then, if I understand it, the result of it has been to relieve those men over there from a bad speculation in the coal business, paying them for the investment they had made, and that was the end of it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman's understanding is a little bit fanciful. It does not necessarily follow because we bought the coal mines that the investment is a poor one. It was developed in the course of that investigation that the coal in the Batan deposits was not suitable to use in war vessels, but it was proper to be used in transports and for mechanical purposes in the islands, and having the coal mines, if we had the money to develop them, it is believed that we would save several hundred thousand dollars a year out of the investment.

But that is speculation. There has not been a dollar appropriated to develop the mines, and authority was refused the Secretary of War to make any lease of them.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman in further re-

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, in further reply, I will say that my understanding is that of the valuable coal, English and American coal constitute the best coal we can get, and American coal, as I understand, has no superior. The great trouble with the Navy Department is that when they advertised for 50,000 tons they could get no single American steamer and only one American vessel, and that proposed to carry 5,000 tons, or about one-tenth of what was required.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say one word. men have taken this as a rather serious matter, I think more serious than the matter deserves, because this law was passed two years ago. Prior to that time we bought our coal and had a perfectly free hand in buying it in the Philippines. Last year the Secretary of the Navy came before the committee and stated the Secretary of the Navy came before the committee and stated that the law worked detrimentally to the Government and he wanted it repealed. We did not bring in any provision last year, but now comes the Chief of the Bureau, who sends up a statement of the condition after the bill was reported to the House, and the gentleman from North Carolina has recommended the amendment which limits simply the appropriation of this year and gives the Secretary of the Navy a free hand in buying coal in the Philippines.

Now, the Chief of the Bureau in the Department states that the law has been in effect two years and a half, and it appears without question that it has been demonstrated that there are not sufficient American ships to carry out the intent of the law, and the operation of the law is detrimental to the interests of the Government and particularly to the Navy Department.

Foreign ships have been carrying the most of the coal since the law has been enacted because we could not get American ships, and therefore it seems to me that we ought this year, in view of the fact that it is a condition and not a theory that confronts us, to adopt this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. William W. Kitchin) there were—ayes 34, noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee rose and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Sherman, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. DOCTOR BEHREND'S PAPER ON THE POTATO.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask that there may be printed as a public document an article by Dr. W. Behrend on The Cultivation of the Potato and its Significance from the Standpoint of Political Economy.

This is a most interesting article relative to the American potato, and, in view of the fact that we are about to enter upon the manufacture of denatured alcohol throughout the country, and the potato will be a very strong element in that industrial product, I think the article is of sufficient value to have it printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears none; and the paper will be printed as a document.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will state that this is the only copy, I assume, there is in the United States; at least, it is the only one that can be found, and it will be necessary for the Printer to be very careful about it. I make the request that the original print be returned to me, so that I may return it to its owner.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FORT BERTHOLD INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS, NORTH DAKOTA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 7495) to define the status of certain patents and pending entries, selections, and filings on lands formerly within the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, in North Dakota, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I understand that a House bill, a substitute for the Senate bill, has already passed. That being the case, I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, with a view to its indefinite postponement.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

MINERAL FUEL LANDS-PUBLIC-LAND SYSTEM.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I call your attention to the urgent need of legislation affecting the different phases of the public-land situation in the United In the first place I wish to speak of the conservation of the mineral fuels belonging to the United States. In my annual message of December 4, 1906, and special message of December 17, your attention was called to the importance of conserving the supplies of mineral fuels still belonging to the Government. I recommended to Congress the enactment of such legislation as would provide for title to and development of the surface land as separate and distinct from the right to the underlying mineral fuels in regions where these may occur, and the disposal of these mineral fuels under a leasing system on conditions which would inure to the benefit of the public as a whole. I again call the attention of Congress to the importance of enacting such legislation. I care little for the details; the prime need is that the system should be established, that from henceforth the nation should retain its title to its fuel resources and its right to supervise their development in the interest of the public as a whole. Such a leasing system as that proposed represents by no means an untried policy. In the Australian countries during the last fifteen years coal has been mined under a system of government leases, and on conditions so favorable for development that their coal and coke are to-day being sold on the Pacific coast of both the American continents. In all the great coal-producing European countries, except Great Britain, coal is being mined under government leases. In Great Britain leases are granted almost entirely by the private landowners, but there, as in other countries, the surface culture and the mining operations are conducted independently of each other. In Nova Scotia, British Columbia, India, and other British colonies a government leasing system has been adopted and is working satisfactorily. In the United States, although conveyance of the mineral rights with the surface has been the common practice, the separate development of the two interests is increasing; and in the Eastern and Middle States a large part of the coal is being mined under a system of private leases. It is gratifying to note that in these States, as in foreign countries, these two great industries—agriculture and mining—are conducted within the same boundaries, and the country thus attains its highest dual development without conflict of interests. Indeed, the mining industry, and the factories using these fuels, create larger local markets for the products of the farm.

Mineral fuels, like the forests and services are conducted within the same boundaries.

Mineral fuels, like the forests and navigable streams, should be treated as public utilities. This is generally recognized abroad. In some foreign countries practical control of a large portion of the fuel resources was allowed years ago to pass into private hands, but the existing governments are endeavoring to regain this control in order that the diminishing fuel supply may be safeguarded for the common good, instead of being disposed of for the benefit of the few—though the mistake of the preceding generation in disposing of these fuels for a nominal return can not always be corrected by the present generation, as the cost may be so enormous as to be prohibitory.

In our own Western States and Territories the scarcity of both water and forests has rendered necessary their preservation as public utilities; and the preservation of the forests for the purpose of conserving both the waters and the timber supply has come to be recognized as the wise and proper policy of the Federal Government.

The quantity of high-grade mineral fuels in the West is relatively much smaller than that of the forests, and the proper conservation of these fuels is a matter of far-reaching importance. This Government should not now repeat the mistakes of the past. Let us not do what the next generation can not undo. We have a right to the proper use of both the forests and the fuel during our lifetime, but we should not dispose of the birthright of our children. If this Government sells its remaining fuel lands they pass out of its future control. If it now leases them we retain control, and a future Congress will be at liberty to decide whether it will continue or change this policy. Meanwhile, the Government can inaugurate a system which will encourage the separate and independent development of the surface lands for agricultural purposes and the extraction of the mineral fuels in such manner as will best meet the needs of the people and best facilitate the development of manufacturing industries.

I am aware that objections to this system are being urged. It is claimed that so large a part of the coal in some of the Western States has already passed into the hands of certain large corporations that parties endeavoring to operate under a lease system other coal deposits would be unable to compete with these corporations, and therefore that the fuel deposits still belonging to the Government should also be allowed to pass into private ownership, presumably into the hands of the same or other large corporations. It is also claimed that reservation of the fuel supplies still belonging to the Government would raise the price of coal in the West, and, as an argument in favor of this contention, it is claimed that the reservation of the natural forests is raising the price of lumber in the West. It should be remembered that the best and most accessible bodies of timber in the West passed into private holdings before the forest reserves were established; that while the price of timber has advanced in the West, it has advanced still more in the East, where there are no forest reserves; that supplies of timber are to-day being shipped from the West to the markets of the Mississippi Valley, and even to forcign countries; and that the probability of obtaining future supplies of both timber and mineral fuel in the West at reasonable prices will be much greater with a large portion of both the forests and the fuels under the control of the Government than if this control should pass to private parties. To secure cheapness of timber and fuel for the moment at the cost of ruin to our own children would surely be a suicidal policy.

It may be fairly claimed among the advantages of the leasing system that: (1) It will facilitate the working, under favorable conditions, of coal deposits for local markets by miners without large capital, as no land-purchase money would be required and the small royalty charges would be paid out of the earnings; (2) it will facilitate larger operations, as the leases could be made sufficiently liberal in the matter of time, area, and other conditions to induce healthy competition and meet all real demands; and yet in all cases the general supervision of the Government could be such as to (3) prevent waste in the extraction and handling of these fuels; (4) the system can be operated in such manner as to prevent the evils of monopolistic control; (5) it will permit the Government to reserve from general use fuels especially suitable for metallurgical and other special industries; and (6) it will enable the Government to protect the public against unreasonable and discriminating charges for fuel supplies.

Already probably one-half of the total area of the high-grade coals in the West has passed under private control. Including both the lignite and the coal areas, these private holdings probably aggregate not less than 30,000,000 acres of coal fields. With the remainder of the lands containing mineral fuels reserved and leased by the Government, there will be ample opportunity to determine, in the near future, which of the two systems—private ownership or the leasing system with General Government supervision—will best protect the interests of the people and thus promote the permanent development of the West.

In planning such a leasing system by the Government, the question of revenue, beyond that necessary to cover the expenses of administration and exploration, need not be seriously considered. The spirit of generosity which the country as a whole has shown in connection with the disposal of its public lands and the use of the proceeds from the sale of these lands for the further development of the West through the Reclamation Service and in other ways, is of itself a sufficient guaranty that in the administration of both the coal reserves and the national forests this generous policy will be continued. It is safe to believe also that Federal supervision of both the coal lands and the forests will be reduced to a minimum, and that in the future even more than in the past this supervision will be limited to that necessary to carry out the policy of conserving these nat-ural resources in such manner as will best promote the permanent interests of the people, and above all of the western peo-ple, of the people in the neighborhood of the mines and the forests which we seek to preserve for the public use.

The necessity for care in the future management of these fuel supplies is further illustrated by the rapid rate at which the use of such fuels is increasing in the United States. The amount of coal used in this country during the last ten years is practically equal to that used during the preceding fifty years of its history, and during each decade of this period the coal used was practically equal to the sum of that used during all the preceding decades.

This remarkable development and the certain continuity of this prodigious growth compels us to recast all estimates as to the life of our "inexhaustible resources." We can foresee the time when the eastern industries will be much more largely taxed for supplying foreign markets. Then the West will also be largely engaged in varied manufacturing enterprises; and this will require the intelligent use of every ton of available fuel in that region. The grave importance of conserving the fuel supplies in the West still remaining under the control of the Government, with a view to the accomplishment of these important purposes, impels me again to bring this matter to the attention of Congress.

Let me repeat that what I seek at this time is that the system be begun. I know the difficulty of providing in minute detail by legislation for all the needs in advance. I have the heartiest sympathy with the desire of the people of the new States of the Rocky Mountain region for the rapid development of the lusty young commonwealths of which they are so proud. So far from hindering, I want to further that development. But surely it is to the peculiar interest of these States that the development shall take place in such way as to leave the children better off, and not worse off, than the fathers. Let us use, but not waste, the national resources. Let us show our confidence in the future being willing to provide for the future. If we dispose of all the coal lands now we can be well assured that twenty-five years hence the generation then coming to manhood will regret our shortsightedness and lack of provision for the future. It would surely be greatly to the advantage of this country if some at least of the coal fields of the East, and especially of the anthracite fields, had been left under the control of the Govern-Let us provide in the West against the recurrence of the conditions which we deplore in the East. At the outset the law would be administered in a spirit of the broadest liberality, with the least possible interference with the development of the coal fields. What is especially necessary is to establish the principle so that as conditions change there will be opportunity to meet the changing need in adequate fashion. Moreover, I can not too emphatically say that all laws which merely seek to prevent monopoly or the mishandling of the public by forbidding combination are certain to fail of their purpose. Our experience with the interstate commerce and antitrust laws shows that what is needed is not prohibition of all combinations, but such supervision and control over combinations, and over corporations entering into them, as will prevent the evils while giving to the public the advantages of combination.

Let me also again urge that legislation be passed to provide for Government control of the public pasture lands of the West on the same general principles which now apply in the Government control of the forest reserves. The local control of the range should be in the hands of western men familiar with stock raising, and there should be full local participation in the management of the range, for cooperation between the stockmen and the Government officers is absolutely essential. There grazing fee should be small and at first almost nominal. is no need at present that the Government should get a net revenue from grazing on the public range, but only enough to pay for administration and improvement, and it may be wise to provide that any surplus shall go to the States and Territories in which the fees are collected. If a law for the control of the range the fees are collected. If a law for the control of the range should, as I request, be enacted, such control would not be taken hurriedly, but gradually, as grazing districts can be organized. The one prime essential in the policy of range control must be to protect the homesteader in his right to create a home for his family. The right of the homesteader, of the home maker, of the actual settler on the land, must always be paramount, and he must have whatever range privileges are necessary to his purpose. At present it is unlawful to fence the public domain. All fences unlawfully maintained will have to be taken down. Unless Congress takes action to legalize reasonable and necessary fencing through Government control of the range, there will be serious loss to stockmen throughout the West, and this loss will often fall hardest on the small man; for in many cases the stock business can not be conducted with-Yet it would be grossly improper to provide for out fences. the continuance of all the present illegal fencing; for while much of this fencing is needed, much of it also represents a fraud upon the public. What is needed is not to provide for the continuance of all fencing, whether beneficial or harmful, but a proper discrimination between the two classes—a discrimination to be exercised always with especial care for the interests of the homesteader and the small stockman. The interests of the man who has actually made his home or is actually seeking to make his home on the land, whether he owns cattle or owns sheep, are really identical with those of the homesteader. opposition to the measure comes primarily from those who do not make their homes on the land, but who own wandering bands of sheep that are driven hither and thither to eat out the land and render it worthless for the real home maker; and also from the men who have already obtained control of great areas of the public land largely through the ownership or leasing of water at what might be called the "strategic points of the range," and who object to the proposed law for the very reason that it is in the interest of the actual homesteader and the small stockman, and because it will break the control that these few big men now have over the lands which they do not actually The proposed law is emphatically a law in the interest of popular rights. The present system in an immense number of cases renders it impossible for the small man to exist; and it works chiefly for the benefit of the very rich man whose interest it is to keep out home makers and preserve immense stretches of the public domain for his own use, to the detriment of the development of the Commonwealth. Surely it is in accordance with the spirit of our Government to pass a law in the interest of the actual settler, instead of to leave undisturbed the present system in the interest of those who monopolize an improper proportion of the public domain, or of the others who are indifferent as to whether in the long run they destroy the worth of the public domain.

As in the case of the proposed law for controlling the disposition of the mineral fuels, our object should be to get the principle of the law established, leaving a necessary discretion to those who at the outset are to administer it, and then to perfect the law later, as actual experience may show the need.

Let me urge that Congress provide $500,000, in addition to the present estimates, to be immediately applied to the clearing of the arrears of business in the General Land Office, as regards the detection and prevention of fraud in disposing of applications for patents to the public lands.

I wish to express my utter and complete dissent from the statements that have been made as to there being but a minimum of fraud in the actual working of our present land laws. I am exceedingly anxious to protect the interests of bona fide settlers and to prevent hardship being inflicted upon them. But surely we are working in their interests when we try to prevent the land which should be reserved for them and for those like them from being taken possession of for speculative purposes or obtained in any fraudulent fashion. The funds ap-propriated by Congress to protect public lands from illegal entry or unlawful appropriation have been utterly insufficient to keep pace with the vast amount of public-land business. For this reason the natural sympathy of the Administration with bona fide claimants and the proper desire to further their interests has led to the use of almost all of this appropriation, not for the detection and prevention of fraud, but for the purpose of hastening the routine hearing and office inspection of final proof. If sufficient money is not now granted to enable the Administration both to protect the interests of bona fide claimants and at the same time to hunt out the fraudulent ones, then the responsibility for the delays which will necessarily occur or for the fraud which will obtain can not rest upon the Administra-tion. The great number of fraudulent cases which our lack of means forces us to leave undetected brings deep discredit on the public-land system of the country, and it does not seem to me that there can be any apology for the Government's failure to provide ample means for their detection and to insist upon the means being so used as to guarantee their detection, and this can only be done if an ample force of inspectors is furnished, so that each entry may be inspected upon the ground or adequate information obtained about it that will satisfy us that the land is being taken in accordance with law. It is not true that any very long time will be needed for such inspection. With the amount provided for which I have asked, the arrears of the work will be brought up within a year, and thereafter the work can be kept up by a continually diminishing appropriation.

The present force of special agents is utterly insufficient to conduct the proper field examinations. But there have been here and there a limited number of such field examinations in which direct investigation by Government officials was added to the evidence furnished by claimants. Four specific examples of these field examinations are as follows (I omit the names of the places):

Summarizing the results, it appears that in these four districts nearly 2,300 cases were examined and that in over half the law had not been complied with, the failure being in each case on some essential feature and in very many cases showing deliberate fraud. In six months ending December 31 last our present insufficient force of special agents secured indictments in 197 actions for fraud, 26 of which have been tried, resulting in 14 convictions and 12 acquittals. In the forest reserves, where we have been able to examine a great number of claims, in about one-third the law was not complied with.

In the Susanville and Sacramento, Cal., placer mining claims it was discovered that one man with fourteen associates had attempted to get possession of 250,000 acres, including much of the finest timber land in the region, by locating placer claims upon it. Three agents on this ground examined 25,000 acres of claims and reported unfavorably upon over 24,000 of them, with a result that up to date, because of this investigation, 36,000 acres were relinquished and restored to governmental ownership while the investigation was still in progress, an amount considerably in excess of the amount actually investi-

While the above cases, of course, show worse results than would be shown by examinations made at random, they are nevertheless by no means unusual, save, perhaps, in the case of the placer-claims investigation. Surely such a showing renders it impossible to say that there is no fraud, and therefore no need of striving to detect and prevent fraud. On the contrary, there is urgent need for such effort in the interest not only of the honest observance of the law, but in the interest of honest and bona fide settlers. Without sufficient money it is impossible to execute the land laws in reasonably prompt and efficient fashion. The business of the Land Office, because of lack of appropriations, is far behind. To protect the public property no less than to relieve the land claimants enough money should be given for the purposes I have outlined above, and the appropriation should be made immediately available. Unless such money is given then either honest claimants must suffer hardship or wrongdoers must be permitted to be the beneficiaries of their fraudulent and illegal acts. From the standpoint of the public interest failure to prevent fraud of this kind is peculiarly serious, because in so many cases the success of the fraudulent claimants means the prevention of the establishment of a home by some honest home seeker. The earnest wish of the Administration is to discontinue the advertisement of fraud in connection with the public-land system; but the only way to accomplish this is by putting a stop to the fraud itself.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the bill (8, 4403) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, without intending any discourtesy to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham], I desire to say that this is a very important matter, and I should be glad to have the conference report printed and go over a day before it is considered. If that be done, there will be no need of having the report read any further.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—
Mr. NELSON. I suggest that, if the Senator from Vermont has no objection.

Mr. LODGE. The report must be read, and the part to which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] has just referred is simply the existing law, as is almost the whole bill reported by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the report.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report, as follows:

again read the last paragraph.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will reread the paragraph, as requested by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, we could all hear the report better if there were not so many speaking at the same time the Secretary is reading. It is very important that Senators should be able to hear the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. TILLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TILLMAN. The report must be read, as I understand, in order to get it before the Senate, and then be considered by the Senate at some time for adoption. The report can not be pressed for consideration to-day, can it?

Mr. ALDRICH. It can be, of course. Mr. TILLMAN. Without having the report printed, so that we can examine and understand it?

Mr. ALDRICH. It can be.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know; but it would hardly be, would it?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not in charge of the matter.

I would suggest to the Senator in charge of Mr. TILLMAN. the conference report to give us an opportunity to examine and understand it. I will ask if it is his purpose to try to force action on the report to-day, or whether he will consent to have it printed and go over, so that we may understand what we are doing?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think, after the report shall have been read, there will be no difficulty in calling attention to four or five provisions where there have been additions to or alterations of the law, so that the Senate can comprehend it without difficulty

Mr. TILLMAN. Is the Senator in charge of the report especially anxious that it should be adopted to-day, or will be consent to have it printed after it is read, so that we can have the printed copies and understand the report?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I would prefer to have action taken upon it, as it has to go to the House of Representative

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator will realize the fact that in the case of a measure of this importance we must have an opportunity to examine it, and we can not act on it to-day with justice to the interests involved.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I suppose it is entirely out of order to interrupt the reading of the report, but as it has been interrupted, I merely want to say, in addition to what the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham] has said, that I think after the report is read the statement of the Senator from Vermont will enable the Senate to understand in a very few moments the only changes in existing law proposed to be made. They are very few, but owing to the form of the House amendment, which was a substitution of an entirely new bill for the Senate bill, it has been necessary to report it as an act. Almost every word that is being read is existing law.

Mr. TILLMAN. At the same time, Mr. President, if I may be permitted, I do not see the dire necessity of dragooning the Senate into the adoption of such a report without an opportunity

Mr. LODGE. There is no intention of dragooning anyone into anything.

Mr. TILLMAN. I say I do not think there is; but I want to give notice that I am going to ask that the matter go over, and that it be printed, so that we can see what we are doing.

Mr. LODGE. Of course the moment the report has been read it goes into print in the Record. I only ask that judgment may be suspended as to not taking action to-day until the Senate has heard the report and listened to the explanation of the chairman of the conference committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have listened very intently to the reading of the report, and all I asked—and I had a right to ask that, even though it interrupted the Secretary-was for an opportunity to hear it read. I ask the Chair to have the reading of the report suspended from time to time until there shall be order in the Chamber to a degree which will render it possible for those of us who want to hear it read to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin is entirely in order.

Mr. FULTON. While the report is being read it ought not to be interrupted, and I would not say anything at all had it not been interrupted. But I do wish to say to the Senator in charge of the report that I think it proposes some very material changes in the existing law, and for one I want to have the report printed. If no other Senator makes that motion, I shall ask that it be laid on the table and printed when the reading is concluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. McCREARY. I am on the Committee on Immigration, and I want to ask the question if there is anything in order now except the reading of the conference report?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is all that is in order at the

Mr. McCREARY. I ask that the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the report.

Mr. CULBERSON. I renew my request that the Secretary reread the last paragraph, so that I can hear it. It is the paragraph that was being read when the reading was discontinued.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report and read to the end of section 13.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, in deference to the wish that has been expressed by several Senators that the report be printed, I move that its further reading be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD and as a document. make a brief statement at this time relating to changes in the existing law.

It will be remembered, Mr. President, that the Senate bill, as it was reported last winter, received one important amendment before it passed this body, which was known as the "educational test," and with that it went to the House. The House committee had already prepared a bill along the same lines, making various amendments to the existing law, including the educational test, and recommended that it be adopted as an amendment to the Senate bill after having struck from the latter everything after the enacting clause. This was done after the adoption of several amendments. The bill as it passed the House did not contain the educational test, but did contain what was known as the "Littauer amendment" to section 1, which provides in substance that an immigrant who proves that he is seeking admission to this country solely to avoid prosecution or punishment on religious or political grounds for an offense of a political character, or prosecution involving danger of impris-onment or danger to life or limb on account of religious belief, shall not be deported because of want of means or the probability of his being unable to earn a livelihood.

The more important questions that have divided the conferees have been those of the educational test, the Littauer amendment, and the amount to be imposed as a head tax. The Senate adopted $5 as the amount of the head tax in place of $2, the existing tax. The House did away with the proposed amendment of $5 and placed the tax where it now is, at $2. The conferees have compromised, and recommended a head tax of $4. But in connection with that they have agreed to an amendment providing that when the immigration fund amounts to more than $2,500,000, and it is pretty nearly, if not quite, up to that point now, any sum received from the head tax over and above that amount shall be covered into the Treasury.

The conferees also recommend that the Littauer amendment be rejected. It appeared to the Senate conferees that under such a provision the class of immigrants that we are most trying to exclude would be brought in. It would open the doors to fraud. It would not apply simply to individual honest cases of the classes mentioned, but it would be used by the undeserving, and our public institutions would soon be burdened with that class who are sure to become public charges if they are admitted to the United States. For this reason the conferees recommend that it should be rejected. They also recommend that the Senate recede from its action adopting the educational test.

Most of the amendments to the various sections of existing law are amendments which were fully discussed in the Senate when the bill was before it last winter. In the draft recom-mended by the conferees substantially all the Senate amendments to the existing law are retained, and added to these are | tion to pass upon it.

a number of House amendments along the same line, all of them intended to strengthen the existing law where in operation it has been found to be weak. I could refer to them in detail if it were necessary

Another amendment proposed by the House is recommended, which provides for the appointment of a commission to take up and investigate the whole question of immigration and report to some subsequent Congress. It provides that the commission shall consist of three members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate; three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, and three persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, and gives them power to make a thorough examination and report. In that section is another provision which, in effect, gives the President authority, whenever he deems it necessary, to enter into negotiations with any individual country for the regulation of immigration from that country, and provides that any action taken by him shall be by and with the advice and consent of the

Mr. GALLINGER. That provision is in the conference report? Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is in the conference report and can be I will not stop to explain it, because those who wish to examine its provisions can best do so with the print before them.

Both the House and the Senate bill provided for a bureau of information in the Bureau of Immigration, which shall gather facts and statistics and information regarding the various States of the Union, their resources, and the opportunity they offer to immigrants, and to print such matter and cause it to be placed in the hands of all admitted aliens.

There was also a provision for maintaining a display station at some one or more of the immigrant stations, where the typical products of the country might be displayed. The provisions of the two respective Houses had the same object in view, but were quite different in phraseology, and the conferees have agreed upon a redraft of the two sections which they think will answer the purpose and prove more satisfactory than either one of the others

Since the bill has been in conference two amendments have been proposed and are recommended. The first one is to be inserted at the close of section 1 and is the provision the Senator from Wisconsin asked to have read the second time. It reads as follows:

Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone.

The other provision is to section 42 of the bill, which is in answer to a very widespread complaint that has been made throughout the country that the steerage passengers coming to this country have not had a sufficient amount of air space in the steamships bringing them. Section 42 provides for an increase in the amount of such air space for steerage passengers, and is believed to be just and reasonable.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Two years are allowed to the steamship com-Mr. LODGE. panies to make the necessary changes and adapt themselves to the new requirements as to air space.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It will go into effect the 1st of January, 1909.

Mr. ALLISON. When do the general provisions of the bill go into effect Mr. DILLINGHAM. The general provisions of the bill go into effect the 1st of July next. I think with this explanation Senators will be able to take the print and judge for themselves as to the work the conferees

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, of course we all know the rules which limit a conference report to the consideration of matters which are in difference between the two Houses and recommendations as to the adjustment of those differences. do not mean to suggest that this report in any manner goes be-yond that rule, but it is extremely difficult to determine, even from the reading of such a report as this, whether or not there has been any variation from that rule. This difficulty grows out the fact that the report practically presents to statute, most of which, as has been stated by Senators in charge, is the reenactment of existing law, and the purpose of my rising is to suggest to Senators, first, that it is absolutely necessary that we should see it in print before we are in condi-

In the second place I want to suggest that in such parts of this report as there is a variation from existing law, it should all be printed in italics, because there is such a mass of it that it will be impossible for one, except at very great cost of time and labor, to compare it with existing law word for word to see whether there has been any change made. I may be entirely mistaken, but it seemed to me, in listening to the report as it was read at the desk, that there were some very material changes made in existing law in the matter of the regulations regarding contract labor. While the words were comparatively few they were very material in their signification and in the changes made. I may be entirely in error as to that, but it is absolutely necessary, in order that we shall be able to turn to the prompt consideration of this measure, that we should have all the assistance which can be given by the suggestion I have made, to enable us to compare the original act with the act as proposed, so as to be able definitely to determine the changes which are made in this bill as it is reported as an

Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator, it seems to me, if he will allow me, has misapprehended the test. The test is not whether there is variation from existing law. The test is whether it involves anything but what was before the committee. Both bills varied from existing law.

Mr. BACON. I am not at all—
Mr. LODGE. Both bills are ostensibly and obviously amend-But the whole matter was before the ments of existing law. committee, because the House substituted an entire new immigration bill for the bill of the Senate, which was an amendatory act. You can not test a conference report on the question of what existing law is. You test it only on what was submitted by the two Houses.

Mr. BACON. The Senator did not hear me. He was not listening all the time or he would not have made the mistake of misconstruing what I said.

Mr. LODGE. I was trying to listen to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. The Senator was under difficulties with which he could not successfully cope. He could not listen to me and to somebody else at the same time.

I was not making the criticism which the Senator thinks I was. I was not criticising the report upon the ground that it exceeded the functions of the committee. On the contrary, I had expressly disclaimed any such criticism and had said that it might be true, and probably is true, that they have not, and the purpose I had was not with a view of making any criticism of that kind upon the committee, but to bring to the attention of the Senate the necessity of having the bill as reported printed with such changes as have been made in italics, not with a view of testing whether or not the conferees have exceeded their function, but for the purpose of enabling us to see whether or not we would agree with the conclusions reached by the committee as to this being the bill which should be passed.

I had mentioned by way of illustration that so far as I could catch the reading from the desk there have been very material changes made in the matter of the regulations as to contract I may be mistaken about that, but it sounded to me so from hearing the report read at the desk. For that reason I desire that the bill, in so far as it assumes to be substantially a reprint of existing law, shall be printed so as to indicate by italics wherever it varies from existing law. Otherwise it will be necessary for a Senator to take the bill as reported and hold it in his hand while he has some one else read the existing law and note word for word where there are any changes proposed to be made. That simply is the suggestion I make, and I am not doing what the Senator from Massachusetts erroneously supposed I was.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BACON. I do.
Mr. NELSON. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia is proper. It simply means that the bill recommended by the conference committee shall be printed in such form that the changes in it from existing law shall be shown in a different type.

Mr. BACON. Exactly.
Mr. NELSON. So that upon inspection we can see what is the old law and what is the law proposed by the committee.

Mr. BACON. Yes. Mr. NELSON. I think that is a reasonable request, and it will make it easier for us to get at the substance of the changes.

Mr. BACON. Absolutely. And not simply to see what are the substantive independent amendments proposed by the conference committee, but wherever in the repetition of existing law there has been a word added to a sentence here or one taken from a sentence there. It may be of the most material character, and yet, unless we do have the bill printed in this way, such changes can only be detected in the manner I have indicated—by a Senator laboriously comparing the report with the text of the existing law. Therefore I make the suggestion, the text of the existing law. and I hope it will be carried out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont moves that the further reading of the report be dispensed with, that the report be printed in the Record, and also be printed as a document. Without objection, the motion is agreed to.

The Senator from Georgia asks that the changes in the law be properly indicated in the print of the report as a Senate Without objection, it is so ordered. Does the Senator from Georgia desire the print in the RECORD to follow his suggestion with respect to the printing of the document?

Mr. BACON. I do not know that that is usual. I do not think it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request applies simply to the document? Mr. BACON. It would spoil the appearance of the RECORD to have that done, and if the report is printed as a document in that way, it will be all right.

Mr. ALLISON. In view of the fact that the House of Representatives struck out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and made a new bill, the two being the basis of the conference report, either to go with the report or as a document, those two bills should be printed.

Mr. LODGE. Both the House and the Senate bill and the existing law all together?

Mr. ALLISON. No; not the existing law. Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Georgia asked to have the existing law printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I am speaking now of the two bills. We have two bills

Mr. SPOONER. I did not understand that the Senator from Georgia asked that the existing law be reprinted, but he asked that there be indicated in printing the bill, by italics or in some other way, the changes which it makes in existing law.
Mr. LODGE. Oh, I see.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the request.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Iowa wants both the Senate and the House bill printed.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes

Mr. ALLISON. I think it would be very convenient for us to have the original text of the two bills before us while we are considering this report.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think there will be no difficulty in doing that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate and House bills will be printed as a part of the document.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the bill (S. 4403) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States,' approved March third, nineteen hundred and three," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

An act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.'

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of four dollars for every alien entering the United States. The said tax shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port or customs district to which said alien shall come, or, if there be no collector at such port or district, then to the collector nearest thereto, by the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle bringing such alien to the United States. The money thus collected, together with all fines and rentals collected under the laws regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and shall constitute a permanent appropriation to be called the "immigrant fund," to be used under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to defray the expense of regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States under said laws, including the contract labor laws, the cost of reports of decisions of the Federal courts, and digest thereof, for the use of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, and the salaries and expenses of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed to enforce said laws. The tax imposed by this section shall be a lien upon the vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation bringing such aliens to the United States, and shall be a debt in favor of the United States against the owner or owners of such vessel or other vehicle, and the payment of such tax may be enforced by any legal or equitable remedy. That the said tax shall not be levied upon aliens who shall enter the United States after an uninterrupted residence of at least one year, immediately preceding such entrance, in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or the Republic of Mexico, nor upon otherwise admissible residents of any possession of the United States, nor upon aliens in transit through the United States, nor upon aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory: Provided, That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, by agreement with transportation lines, as provided in section thirty-two of this act, may arrange in some other manner for the payment of the tax imposed by this section upon any or all aliens seeking admission from foreign contiguous territory: Provided further, That if in any fiscal year the amount of money collected under the provisions of this section shall exceed two million five hundred thousand dollars, the excess above that amount shall not be added to the "immigrant fund:" Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to aliens arriving in Guam, Porto Rico, or Hawaii; but if any such alien, not having become a citizen of the United States, shall later arrive at any port or place of the United States on the North American continent, the provisions of this section shall apply: Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any* foreign government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone.

Sec. 2. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States:

All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars, persons afflicted with tuberculosis, or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who admit their belief in the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all government, or of all forms of law, or the assassination of public officials; prostitutes, or women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment or in consequence of agreements, oral, written, or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled; those who have been, within one year from the date of application for admission to the United States, deported as having been induced or solicited to migrate as above described; any person whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes, and that said ticket or passage was not paid for by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government, either directly or indirectly; all children under sixteen years of age, unaccompanied by one or both of their parents, at the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and

Labor or under such regulations as he may from time to time prescribe: Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving meral turpitude: Provided further, That the provisions of this section relating to the payments for tickets or passage by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government shall not apply to the tickets or passage of aliens in immediate and continuous transit through the United States to foreign contiguous territory: And provided further, That skilled labor may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country; And provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants.

as personal or domestic servants.

Sec. 3. That the importation into the United States of any alien woman or girl for the purpose of prostitution, or for any other immoral purpose, is hereby forbidden; and whoever shall, directly or indirectly, import or attempt to import into the United States any alien woman or girl for the purpose of prostitution, or for any other immoral purpose, or whoever shall hold or attempt to hold any alien woman or girl for any such purpose in pursuance of such illegal importation, or whoever shall keep, maintain, control, support, or harbor in any house or other place, for the purpose of prostitution, or for any other immoral purpose, any alien woman or girl, within three years after she shall have entered the United States, shall, in every such case, be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof be imprisoned not more than five years and pay a fine of not more than five thousand dollars; and any alien woman or girl who shall be found an inmate of a house of prostitution or practicing prostitution, at any time within three years after she shall have entered the United States, shall be deemed to be unlawfully within the United States and shall be deemed to be provided by sections twenty and twenty-one of this act.

Sec. 4. That it shall be a misdemeanor for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way to assist or encourage the importation or migration of any contract laborer or contract laborers into the United States, unless such contract laborer or contract laborers are exempted under the terms of the last two provisos contained in section two of this act.

SEC. 5. That for every violation of any of the provisions of section four of this act the persons, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same by knowingly assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or importation of any contract laborer into the United States shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of one thousand dollars, which may be sued for and recovered by the United States, or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor in his own name and for his own benefit, including any such alien thus promised labor or service of any kind as aforesaid, as debts of like amount are now recovered in the courts of the United States; and separate suits may be brought for each alien thus promised labor or service of any kind as aforesaid. And it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the proper district to prosecute every such suit when brought by the United States.

Sec. 6. That it shall be unlawful and be deemed a violation of section four of this act to assist or encourage the importation

Sec. 6. That it shall be unlawful and be deemed a violation of section four of this act to assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien by promise of employment through advertisements printed and published in any foreign country; and any alien coming to this country in consequence of such an advertisement shall be treated as coming under promise or agreement as contemplated in section two of this act, and the penalties imposed by section five of this act shall be applicable to such a case: Provided, That this section shall not apply to States or Territories, the District of Columbia, or places subject to the jurisdiction of the United States advertising the inducements they offer for immigration thereto, respectively.

SEC. 7. The master of a vessel coming to a port or place in the United States in violation of either of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor; and if the number of passengers other than cabin passengers carried or brought in the vessel, or in any compartment, space, poop, or deck house thereof, is greater than the number allowed to be carried or brought therein, respectively, as hereinbefore prescribed, the said master shall be fined fifty dollars for each and every passenger in excess of the proper number, and may also be imprisoned not exceeding six months.

This section shall take effect on January first, nineteen hundred and nine.

Sec. 43. That the act of March third, nineteen hundred and three, being an act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, except section thirty-four thereof, and the act of March twenty-second, nineteen hundred and four, being an act to extend the exemption from head tax to citizens of Newfoundland entering the United States, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed: That this act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend existing laws relating to the immigration or exclusion of Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent, nor to repeal, alter, or amend section six, chapter four hundred and fifty-three, third session Fifty-eighth Congress, approved February sixth, nineteen hundred and five, or, prior to January first, nineteen hundred and nine, section one of the act approved August second, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea."

and nine.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 925) for the construction of a steam vessel for the Revenue-Cutter Service for duty in the district of Puget Sound, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the House, the Chair to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Chair appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. Elkins, Mr. Perkins, and Mr. MALLORY.

UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. CARTER. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25013) granting to the regents of the University of Oklahoma section No. 36, in township No. 9 north, of range No. 3 west, of the Indian meridian, in Cleveland County, Okla., to report it favorably with an amendment. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the report.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Montana.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the word "That," to insert "subject to confirmation by the legislature of Oklahoma."

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT KANSAS CITY, MO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 7211) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act to construct a bridge across the Missouri River at a point between Kansas City and Sibley, in Jackson County, Mo.," approved March 19,

The amendments of the House were, on page 1, line 12, after "years," to insert "and be completed within three years."

On page 2, line 1, to strike out all after "seven" down and including "thereafter" in line 2.

On page 2, line 4, after "void," to insert:

Provided, That such beginning of construction within said period of one year shall relate to the superstructure of said bridge above the pier heretofore constructed over the Missouri River in pursuance of the act of which this act is amendatory: And provided further, That in all matters and particulars not expressly provided for in the act of which this act is amendatory the construction, control, and use of such bridge shall be governed by the act of Congress approved March 23, 1906, entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters."

Mr. WARNER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, that the request for a conference be agreed to, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. WARREN, Mr. FORAKER, and Mr. BLACKBURN.

APPEALS IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15434) to regulate appeals in criminal prosecutions, which was under consideration yesterday.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to state— Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply wish to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that yesterday I reported the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which is a rather troublesome appropriation. priation bill and will take some time in conference. I would ask the Senator if we can not agree that if the bill in which he is interested shall be under discussion at 4 o'clock will he then allow me to proceed with the appropriation bill?

Mr. NELSON. I will, unless there should be an immediate prospect of a vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is satisfactory. I desire further to suggest that if the bill the Senator from Minnesota has in charge shall be concluded before 4 o'clock, I will then ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

SALARIES OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY AND ASSISTANTS.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to call up the bill (S. 8161) in relation to salaries of district attorney and assistant district attorneys for the northern district of Illinois.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. HOPKINS. On page 1, line 6, before the word "dollars," move to strike out the words "ten thousand" and insert "seven thousand five hundred."

I will state for the benefit of the Senate that that conforms to the House bill, which is now on the Calendar of the House, reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee of the House, the same as this bill has been reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

SENATOR FROM UTAH.

Mr. KNOX. I desire to give notice that, with the permission of the Senate, to-morrow morning, after the close of the rou-tine business, I will submit some remarks on resolution No. 142, reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

APPEALS IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15434) to regulate appeals in criminal prosecutions.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, recognizing that all controverted legislation is a matter of compromise, and being exceedingly anxious to get some relief in the line of this proposed legislation, I have concluded to accept certain amendments, unless my colleagues on the Judiciary Committee should object, and I do not think any of them will object.

I ask the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Clarke] to bear with me for a minute, while I have the bill perfected in the first instance.

With the permission of the Senator from Washington [Mr.

PILES], who offered the amendment, I move to reconsider the amendment which he offered as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves to reconsider the vote by which the following amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The Secretary will state the amend-

The Secretary. In line 20, after the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] and agreed to, the Senator from Washington [Mr. Piles] proposed the following amendment, which was agreed to:

Pending the appeal or writ of error the defendant may be in all oper cases admitted to bail or released on his own recognizance, in e discretion of the presiding judge.

Mr. NELSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the amendment be rejected. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment which has just been read. The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NELSON. I now ask that the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada, which, in substance, provides that pending an appeal the defendant should be admitted to bail on his own recognizance, be adopted.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment presented by the Senator from Nevada is not at the Secretary's desk.

Mr. NELSON. He moved an amendment. I can state the amendment. It is to insert:

Pending an appeal or writ of error the defendant shall be admitted to bail on his own recognizance.

I ask that that amendment to the amendment be adopted.

I understand the Senator consents to that. Mr. NELSON. Certainly

Mr. HALE. My recollection is that some Senator offered an amendment in that form.

Mr. NELSON. It was offered by the Senator from Nevada, and then the Senator from Washington offered a substitute which was adopted and which, on my motion, has been reconsidered and rejected, to the end that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada may be adopted.

Mr. HALE. And now we come back to the original amendment, which provides that the accused shall be released on his own recognizance.

Mr. NELSON. Pending the appeal.

Mr. HALE. That is to be inserted in the bill?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir; I ask to have that amendment

Mr. HALE. I think that is very important.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President—
Mr. NELSON. I trust the Senator from Montana will not object to the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. I desire merely to call the attention of the Senate to the suggestion made by the Senator from Washington, which seemed to be possessed of some merit. In the case of an individual charged with murder in the first degree it seems hardly proper to admit the defendant to bail on his own recognized. Such a case might arise, and it does seem to me that some discretion might be left to the court in that matter. I do not wish to antagonize the amendment, but I suggest that a situation might arise under it which might become very embarrassing.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the amendment be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 20, and after the amendment already agreed to at that place, insert:

Pending an appeal or writ of error the defendant shall be admitted to ill on his own recognizance.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the fact that that language does not seem very well guarded. It should be limited to an appeal taken by the United States.

Mr. NELSON. That is what I mean.
Mr. HEYBURN. It does not say that.
Mr. NELSON. Let those words be inserted so as to read "pending an appeal or writ of error by the United States."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be so modified.

The amendment to the amendment as modified was agreed to. Mr. NELSON. Now, the state of the bill, Mr. President, is this: At the end of the bill the first amendment adopted was the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter], providing that the appeal in these cases should be taken within thirty days and be given the right of way and expedited. The amendment which we have just adopted leaves it so that pending an appeal the defendant is admitted to bail on his own recognizance.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] will now offer an amendment to which I agree. I think it is covered by the bill as it stands now; it means exactly what he intends; but to the end that there may be no doubt about it I have concluded to accept that amendment, if the Senator from Maryland will be kind enough to offer it.

Mr. RAYNER. I propose an amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The Secretary. After the amendment just agreed to insert:

Provided, That if upon appeal or writ of error it shall be found that there was error in the rulings of the court during the trial, a verdict or judgment in favor of the defendant shall not be set aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. Table Calendar 26, Senate resolution 214, by Mr. CARTER

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily Without objection, it is so ordered. laid aside.

Mr. RAYNER. I will eliminate the words "or judgment."

Just let it stand "in the rulings of the court during the trial, a verdict in favor of the defendant shall not be set aside.

Mr. NELSON. The words "or judgment" are stricken out. Mr. RAYNER. Those two words are stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment as modified.

The amendment to the amendment as modified was agreed to. Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I offer an amendment to the bill to take the place of the matter on the second page, line 11 to line 16, both inclusive.

VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment, proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, will be read.

The Secretary. On page 2 strike out all of lines 11, 12, and 13, down to and including line 16, and insert:

From a decision or judgment quashing, setting aside, or sustaining a demurrer to any indictment, or any count thereof, where the ground for such motion or demurrer is the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the indictment is founded.

From a decision arresting a judgment of conviction for insufficiency of the indictment where the ground of insufficiency thereof is the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the same is founded.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if my colleagues of the committee have no objection, I will accept that amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I now reoffer-

Mr. HALE. Before we pass from this consideration let that part of the text of the bill in connection with the last amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas be read, so that we may see just where it applies.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. NELSON. It relates, I will say to the Senator from Maine, to the three first grounds of appeal.

Mr. HALE. I so understand, but I should like to have the text read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary. As now amended the amendment reads:

In all criminal cases, in the following instances, to wit:

From a decision or judgment quashing, setting aside, or sustaining a demurrer to any indictment, or any count thereof, where the ground for such motion or demurrer is the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the indictment is founded.

From a decision arresting a judgment of conviction for insufficiency of the indictment where the ground of insufficiency thereof is the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the same is founded.

Man NEL SON. That limits it

Mr. NELSON. That limits it. Mr. HALE. The excepted clauses have been read. Now, I want the Secretary in reading to go back a little further and read the text of the amendment of the committee, so that we may see what is the actual force of the enacting part of the bill for which this is an exception.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I think I should not offer the amendment without some word of explanation concerning its effect. I wish to state my view of it to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine desires first to have the text read.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Very well. The Secretary. The text reads as follows, striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting:

That a writ of error may be taken by and on behalf of the United States from the district or circuit courts to the Supreme Court or the circuit courts of appeals, as prescribed in an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, and the act amendatory thereof, in all criminal cases, in the following instances, to wit—

Mr. HALE. The Secretary need not read further, as the Senator from Arkansas desires to explain his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the object of the amendment is to limit the right of appeal upon the part of the General Government to the validity or constitutionality of the statute in which the prosecution is proceeding. It has been enlarged by the addition of another clause, which gives the right of appeal where the construction by the trial court is such as to decide that there is no offense committed, notwithstanding the validity of the statute, and in other respects the proceeding may remain intact. I think that is a broad enough right to concede to the General Government in the prosecution of persons in the court.

The Constitution of the United States guarantees to every defendant arraigned in the courts the right to speedy and pub-lic trial. The amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee of this body very greatly limited that by keeping the defendant dancing attendance upon the court until a new trial of the case had been disposed of by the appellate court. I thought that was an unfair invasion of the constitutional right to speedy and fair and public trial. I believe that wherever the validity of a statute passed by Congress is drawn in ques-tion in a court and the decision is adverse to its constitutionality, the Government ought to have the right to submit it to the final arbiter of such questions. I do not believe it to be proper to increase the opportunity of the Government to convict the defendants in courts. The fact of the business is their rights there are now limited to too great an extent. self I would require the judges who tried cases on the circuit to reduce their instructions to writing before the argument begins, I would deny them the right to comment upon the weight of the testimony and its effect in their directions to the jury as to what they should do in matters of fact. I believe that it would be a wholesome change in the law.

In view of the defects that recent years have disclosed, I do not believe it to be sound policy to go beyond the necessities as they have developed defects in our procedure. A case recently occurring has drawn attention to the fact that if a circuit judge or a district judge holding the circuit should determine that a statute of Congress was invalid, the United States is without means of having that matter submitted to a states is without means of having that matter submitted to a tribunal that under the Constitution has power to settle that question. I do not believe the remedy ought to be any wider than the mischief that has been disclosed. I do not believe that any additional advantages ought to be given to the General Government in the prosecution of persons arraigned in court, but I do believe the paragraph ought to be perfected in that behalf, so as to provide that there shall be an appeal to the court having authority to give uniformity to the practice which shall prevail in all the courts of the United States, and that they shall be ready to say, and say promptly, what the statute means and whether or not it is a valid statute.

means and whether or not it is a valid statute.

There are three provisions of law that it is proposed the amendment shall supplant: To provide for an appeal from a decision or a judgment quashing or setting aside an indictment; and then a general permission to the appellate court to entertain jurisdiction and to review every practical misunderstanding or every practical difference of opinion that can arise between the district attorney and the district judge, whether it grows out of the form of the indictment or the validity of the organization of the grand jury, or whether some illegal testimony has been taken before the grand jury at the time and occasion of the indictment being found. I think that has proved to be a bad provision, at least in the State of Arkansas, where it prevails. Notices for review from the court are hung up. The vails. Notices for review from the court are hung up. The courts can be engaged in a great deal better business than deciding trifling and immaterial differences of opinion between prosecuting attorneys and circuit judges as to whether an indictment is or is not in proper form. The matters which provoke these differences of opinion between district attorneys and the court relate to the manner of the allegation, defective statements in the judgment of the court, which can be readily cured by a reference to the grand jury and be disposed of and the defendant be given a right to a speedy trial. Where the district attorney, under this law, should prove to be stubborn, as they many times do, then the defendant must dance attendance there for a year or so until the appellate court has disposed of the matter, which never was of the substance and never should have been made to operate to the detriment of the defendant.

The next clause that I intend to supplant is the decision or judgment sustaining a demurrer from the indictment or any count thereof, and the unlimited right to appeal wherever there has been a judgment rendered by the court on the disagreement of the district attorney and the court which involves sustaining the demurrer to an indictment. These matters come up every day now. They are of everyday occurrence in the courts of the country and can be disposed of by a mere reference to the grand jury to cure the defects developed in their argument. There never was any good reason why the matter should be carried to the appellate court and the defendant put to the necessity of dancing attendance there until it was disposed of by the court.

An objection also is found, in my judgment, in that it still further congests the already overcrowded dockets of the appellate courts of this country. That is most notable in the docket of the Supreme Court of the United States, where a man is fortunate if he gets a decision of the case within three years after the transcript has been lodged there.

So I think this amendment gives expression to the proposition that the remedy we provide here now should be no wider than the defect that has been disclosed in the preceding criminal procedure; and that is that whenever the validity of a statute has been adversely decided by a trial court, wherever its unconstitutionality has been pronounced by a trial court, the Government ought to have the right to promptly submit that to the tribunal having authority to dispose of such questions in order that there may be a uniform enforcement of the law throughout the entire limits of the United States.

This is the purpose I have, Mr. President, and having discussed it with the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] and the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], we agreed that that would probably meet the defect.

Mr. HEYBURN obtained the floor.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Idaho yield until the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas has been acted upon?
Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Clarke] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I now call up for consideration the amendment which I offered on yesterday, which was, on page 2, line 21, after the word "objections," proposing to insert the words "by the United States;" and in line 22, after the word "form," to strike out "only" and insert the words "or law."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 2, line 21, after the word "objections," it is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting the words "by the United States;" and in line 22, after the word "form," by striking out the word "only" and inserting the words "or law."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely desire to state, in a word, the purpose, so that it may appear in connection with the proposed amendment. It is to confine the operation of the paragraph to the United States, so that the defendant may be not included within the limitation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I do not regret, Mr. President, calling the attention of the Senate, when the bill was first reported, to what I believed was the dangerous feature and tendency embodied in the bill

There never has been much real grievance nor much real wrong from adhering very strictly to the old propositions with regard to criminal trials. The advantage in all such proceedings is with the Government. It has unlimited power and unlimited disposition of moneys in order to maintain its proposition, and it arrays the whole force of a great Government against the single, struggling accused. It is much better, Mr. President, that instead of yielding to the tendency, which is quite uppermost to-day, of conferring more and more power and more and more privileges upon the Government as against the citizen—it is much better to stand upon the ancient ways.

The present bill has been greatly improved. Without criticising the Committee on the Judiciary, to which we look as the conservative organ of this body, to be wary and slow in innovations where the right of the citizen is concerned, I hope hereafter the Committee on the Judiciary will take notice that it should maintain what, in view of the whole Senate, I believe it has heretofore—its attitude as a conservative body that stands against all encroachments.

As I have said, the bill has been greatly improved. It is surprising that as originally reported to this body it gave, after the old fashion of the legislature and legal procedure of England in the time of the Stuarts, the opportunity for oppressing and wearing out the accused by the instrumentalities which the Government invoked in its management and control of legal procedure. All that, through the opposition to the original bill, has been swept away.

I think the right of the accused to release upon his own recognizance, the provision for expediting the trial, and for relieving him from the worry and strain in which he must always be worn out by the Government is a very great improvement in the bill. For one, I accept it as having been greatly bettered by the discussion and the amendments which have been adopted; but I am not able, Mr. President, even as it is now, to vote for the bill, though I shall make no further demurrer or protestation.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I merely want to say a word in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale]. Of course, we all appreciate the spirit which induces the view which he takes of this bill. What I wish to say is that the Senator, I think, is mistaken in supposing that the original bill had the scope which he indicates in the remarks which he has just made to the Senate.

According to the original bill, from our standpoint and as we construed it, there was no possibility of any defendant being harassed by repeated trials; there was no possibility of his being twice put in jeopardy; there was no difference between the committee and the Senators who have criticised the bill as to the desire and the intent that there should be no opportunity for such harassment and no opportunity for a defendant being twice put in jeopardy.

The only difference has been as to whether or not the language in the bill could be construed to authorize that which we all recognized would be not desirable and which would be an injustice. Therefore, while the members of the Judiciary Committee are always ready to receive with due deference the criticisms of the Senate and deem that it is entirely proper that we should have them expressed by Senators, I simply rose to say that the suggestion of the Senator that the original bill was of the scope and effect as he construed it is, in our opinion, not in accordance with the correct interpretation of the language in the bill, and certainly not in accord with our interpretation of the same. We do not think that the bill has been in any material manner changed by amendments, except by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Clarke], which limits to some extent the character of questions which can be taken up by writ of error to the appellate court. With that exception the bill is practically what it was before. The amendments have only expressed what the committee has from the beginning understood the bill to mean when its language is

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would like to ask the Senator-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question, and that is whether it is not possible to so shape the bill as to give the defendant the same status that he now has before the law—that is to say, when a verdict in his favor is given or an order of dismissal is made, he shall go free and at the same time provide for the appeal so as to insure uniformity of decision as to the constitutional questions involved and uniformity of construction as to United States statutes?

I did not understand the Senator's question. Mr. BACON.

It is somewhat involved.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I asked the Senator whether it would not be possible to so shape this bill that the defendant can go free upon verdict in a court below or upon a judgment or order dismissing the indictment and discharging the defendant, and at the same time provide for an appeal which will enable us to secure uniformity of decision by the lower courts as to constitutional questions and uniformity of construction as to national statutes:

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if I correctly understand the bill-

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me say further regarding that that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] suggests—and I make the question with reference to this point—the Senator from Wisconsin suggests that such a case as that would be simply a moot case, and he doubts whether the Supreme Court would assume jurisdiction of it. I am not willing in this matter to affect at all the right of the defendant under existing law or to increase his hardship.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. During the Senator's absence we reconsidered the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Piles] and adopted the amendment which the Senator from Nevada offered the other day.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes, Mr. President; but that does not meet the difficulty. The amendment which I offered the other day simply allows the defendant to be discharged upon his own recognizance.

Mr. SPOONER. Well— Mr. NEWLANDS. But, if the case is reversed by the court above, and the defendant, by a trial, is not put twice in jeopardy, the trial may proceed and a conviction may be secured. What I want is this: That the decision of the court below as to the defendant's liberty or life shall be final; but, at the same time, I want to see some method of procedure adopted that will carry the question of the constitutionality of the statutes passed by Congress or their construction to the United States Supreme Court, so that it can lay down a uniform rule of decision which thereafter will apply to all inferior courts. I do not want to affect the right of the citizen by this procedure at all, but I do wish to secure uniformity of decision upon these questions.

Of course, I regard the adoption of the amendment that I offered as a step in the line of improving the bill, but, since that amendment was offered and upon reflection, it seems to me that it does not go as far as I desire.

I do not wish to affect the right of the defendant at all. I want to see him go free; I want to see but one proceeding against him in the lower court, and if that decision of the court is favorable to him in any way, I wish him to have final advantage of it, and not be kept in suspense for two or three years while the matter is in appeal to an appellate court.

I appeal to the Senator from Georgia, as I have appealed to the Senator from Wisconsin, as to whether or not some procedure can be adopted that will enable us to get a decision of the court without affecting the liberty of the defendant.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me for saying that if he simply means to inquire whether or not the bill can be so framed that the defendant can thereafter have no other connection with the case, then I do not think it can be done, because it would be absolutely a moot case. The purpose of the bill and of the amendments has been to relieve him of anything like restraint in the time while the court is deciding the question of law involved. But to say that it shall be a finality as to him, and that he can not have his name any further con-nected with the case, would make it impossible for the case to be carried to the Supreme Court. The court is without jurisdiction to try and determine an alleged controversy or case to which there are no parties, and particularly so in an alleged criminal case where there is no defendant.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I merely want to say to the Senator from Nevada that after he left the Chamber the bill was amended so as to limit its scope to questions that involve the constitutionality and construction of statutes. Therefore there is no great danger now that anybody will be very seriously oppressed by the bill in its present condition. Under the bill the inquiry is limited to questions of law-not questions of law generally, but only such as involve the constitutionality of and the construction of statutes. The scope of the bill has been very much narrowed.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, Mr. President, that does improve the bill, but still it leaves the defendant in a state of suspense. His liberty or his life may depend upon that appeal. I do not wish to inflict upon the defendant any greater hardship than is now imposed upon him by the law. At the same time I conceive that it is of the highest importance that we should not have varying decisions by lower courts as to the constitutionality of United States statutes, and that we should not have varying decisions of lower courts as to the construction of the United States statutes. Therefore, I should like to see some proceedings inaugurated that will enable us to get that uniformity of decision, without imperiling the life or liberty of the defendant, who, as a rule, is discharged and is entitled to discharge under existing law.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President—
Mr. NEWLANDS. Just one word further. I ask whether this suggestion may not in part improve this bill? The Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Georgia say that, if we simply take an appeal of that kind, from which the prisoner's interests are entirely eliminated, we will have a moot case presented to the Supreme Court, and the Senator from Wisconsin went so far as to say that, if he were on the bench, he would refuse to take jurisdiction of such an appeal.

If that be true, can we not in the line of the humane shaping of this bill provide that, if the Supreme Court reverses the decision of the court below, and as the result of that decision the defendant is subjected to another trial, and is convicted, the punishment itself shall be simply a nominal one of imprisonment not exceeding six months, or a fine? Then we would have a genuine case presented to the Supreme Court of the United States and not a moot question, and then we would not have materially affected the status of the defendant under the existing law. Under statute law to-day and under the common law the prisoner is entitled to a discharge upon the order and judgment of the inferior court.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. SPOONER. I only rose to say that I thought the Senator from Nevada himself suggested in the amendment which he proposed the only possible means by which there could be accomplished what he desires to accomplish. If it is declared that when a motion in arrest of judgment is granted the defendant shall never be tried again, jeopardy or no jeopardy, then, of course, there is no party; it is not a suit; it is not a case; it is purely and simply moot. It is an anomalous proceeding, or an attempt to put to the Supreme Court of the United States a question.

The Constitution gives the Supreme Court jurisdiction of cases, and the court has decided what is essential to constitute "suits" or "cases." Congress has before now attempted to impose upon the Federal courts functions which the courts held were not judicial, and the Supreme Court has repeatedly decided that it will not pass upon purely moot cases. They deal only with cases in which they can make a mandate and enforce it. That is the rule, and no stronger opinion has ever been delivered on that, as I said yesterday, than the last opinion which was ever written by Mr. Chief Justice Taney. He died before the announcement of the decision; but so profoundly impressed was the court by his opinion upon the subject, that they ordered the opinion, after his death, to be incorporated in the report as an appendix, and to all intents and purposes adopted it. The court afterwards followed it formally in another case, that of Sanborn v. The United States.

The Senator suggested an amendment which provided, I thought, an escape from this difficulty and at the same time minimizing to the uttermost extent the handicap or disadvantage to the defendant, by suggesting that he be released on his own recognizance. He would be still on the record a party to the case. It is no moot case if he has been in jeopardy, and if the Supreme Court reverses the order of the court granting the motion in ar-rest, he could not be again tried. His plea, if he were reindicted, would be good, but you have preserved in form the suit; you have the plaintiff, the Government, and the defendant. The defendant, of course, is out wholly on his own recognizance, and all the Senator has suggested or can suggest as of any disadvantage in this particular to the defendant is that he will be under the mental suspense of being out on his own recognizance and of facing the possibility that he may be again called to the bar of the court and obliged to make his plea or defense; but what the Senator would do and must do-

Mr. NEWLANDS rose.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me—is to do that thing which best conserves the public interest and least affects the defendant. That was done as well as it can possibly be done by the idea which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. New-LANDS] embodied in his amendment. The man may go where he chooses; he may go across the sea; he is in no barrassed; and if the case is one of such enormity, if it be a case of piracy, of mutiny on the high seas, a case of treason, or some case in which the Government would be loath to forbear another prosecution, they could keep track of him and obtain his presence if it were ever needed. That would cost something, but I would not consider, nor would the Senator consider, for a moment that cost as against the keeping in prison of a man indefi-nitely who could not give bail, or leaving it—as the amendment for which I voted, but for which I would not vote again, which was proposed as a substitute for that of the Senator from Nevada-entirely discretionary as to whether he should be discharged on his own recognizance or admitted to bail at all upon such terms as the judge should prescribe.

I say again, although of course it is a mere repetition and unnecessary, that to provide for the taking to the court of last resort criminal cases involving the constitutionality of a law in no way would accomplish that which was suggested by the Senator from Nevada except by the discharge of the man in such a case on his own recognizance. This would leave the lawsuit and leave the man as defendant with the slightest possible restrictive disadvantage.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I have not given this mat-ter very much reflection. I have only given it such consideration as that afforded by a casual hearing of the debates here

I quite agree with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] that our action should be that which would best conserve the public interest and least affect the rights of the defendant. Now, what is the right of the defendant under existing law? His right is to go free and be forever discharged. But I ask the members of the Judiciary Committee whether they could take some proceeding

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator that the bill as it now stands would not necessarily lead to such a result as he has just announced. The difficulty would be of this character: Judges differing as to whether or not a statute is con-In the Senator's State a judge may decide that a statute is unconstitutional and say that the prisoner may go free, while in my State the judge may take the view that it is constitutional under the statute in that State, and imprison a man for violation of its provisions. There is now a provision of law, but there ought not to be, which permits that condition to continue by which a citizen of the Senator's State under an erroneous opinion of a judge in some preliminary matter might I will go as far as the Senator to protect a defendant from undue oppression by the General Government. that the rules and regulations have gone beyond what justice requires. I believe, as the bill now stands, the objection which the Senator urges is farfetched, if I may use such a term as I believe that in its operation there will be oppression as to but very few people.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I quite agree that the interests of the public should be conserved by securing uniformity of decision. I am opposed, however, to any action that will seriously affect the right of the defendant, and the right of the defendant under existing law is to go free.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, under existing law that is not true in all cases

Mr. NEWLANDS. Not in all cases, but in some cases; and

I would not affect his right at all. If under existing law the case could be submitted to another grand jury, I would not affect that; but if under existing law the effect of the judgment of the court or the verdict of the jury would be to let a defendant go forever free, I would not affect that.

But the Senator from Wisconsin tells us that we can not present a moot case to the Supreme Court. Very well; I yield to that; but I suggest that the action should be such as will least affect the rights of the defendant. What can we do in this proposed statute? We can minimize the punishment under such conditions; we can provide that the man who would, under existing law, go free may, under the decision reversing that case and remanding him to the lower court, be, if existing law warrants it, tried again, but that the punishment shall be simply nominal-imprisonment for six months or fine not exceeding $1,000. In that way we would conserve the interests of the defendant in the case, and the appeal would be an actual case pending in court of which the Supreme Court would take jurisdiction on appeal.

Mr. SPOONER. What would become of the defendant in the meantime?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let him go on his own recognizance. The Senator from Wisconsin says that he is willing to join in such action as will least affect the right of the defendant. ask the Senator from Wisconsin, then, to frame an amendment that will least affect his right. His right under existing law is to go free. In this case you propose to affect that right by this appeal, and you propose legislation that in the end may put this man, who is now free, behind the bars, or put him upon the scaffold, and you do it after keeping him in suspense for one. two, or three years, thus violating the essential humanity of the law, which demands speediness of trial, as well as that the defendant shall not be twice put in jeopardy.

I take the Senator from Wisconsin at his word then, and I ask that an amendment be shaped here that will least affect the right of a defendant. I do not suggest imprisonment for only one day; let the punishment be a substantial one, but certainly not a severe punishment affecting his life or his liberty for a long time, from which he would be entirely exempt upon the decision of the lower court under existing law.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly. Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I desire to ask the Senator from Nevada if he thinks that an erroneous decision of a district judge should operate as the pardoning power? That is what he is contending for.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What I do say is that, under existing law of the United States and at common law, the decision of the court below was final, so far as the rights of the defendant were concerned.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There was no such thing as the constitutionality of a statute at the common law. We have a brand-new question and a brand-new situation with which we Simply because the appellate court corrects an erroneous decision of a minor court is no reason why a defendant should have less or more than any other defendant who happens to do the same act.

Mr. President, I can not see the argument Mr. CARMACK. presented by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. not see where any man can claim that he has suffered a hardship if he has been required to answer to a charge made under a constitutional statute. I can not see that he has any right to complain of hardship if he is tried and punished for a crime he has committed against a constitutional statute. I can see how the Senator from Nevada would bring about a very unequal administration of the criminal laws if in one case he provides that a man shall be permitted to go absolutely free on the erro-neous decision of one judge as to the constitutionality of a law, while a man tried for exactly the same offense before another judge under the same law would be put in the penitentiary. It looks to me like the latter individual might have some right to complain, at least of the inequality of the administration of the law. But a man who is properly charged with the offense of violating a constitutional law has no right to complain of any hardship because he is tried, and he has no right to complain of any hardship if he is convicted and punished for his crime.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The purpose of this bill is to subserve the public interest by securing uniformity of decisions as to the constitutionality of the United States statutes or as to their constitutionally of the other states statutes of as to their construction. I am with that purpose and any proper expression of it. If the purpose of this legislation is to add to the hardship of the defendant, I am against it, and I am against any feature which adds to his hardship.

Now, with this view, I move that the bill be recommitted to the Judiciary Committee with instructions so to shape it that it will least affect the right of the defendant under existing law. Mr. MALLORY. I ask that the bill be reported to the Senate as it has been amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill as it stands.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That a writ of error may be taken by and on behalf of the United States from the district or circuit courts to the Supreme Court or the circuit courts of appeals as prescribed in an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, and the acts amendatory thereof in all criminal cases, in the following instances, to wit:

From a decision or judgment quashing, setting aside, or sustaining a demurrer to any indictment or any count thereof, where the ground for such motion or demurrer is the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the indictment is founded.

From a decision arresting a judgment of conviction for insufficiency of the indictment, where the ground for the insufficiency thereof is the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the same is founded.

the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the same is founded.

From the decision or judgment sustaining a special plea in bar, where the defendant has not been put in jeopardy.

In all these instances the United States shall be entitled to a bill of exceptions as in civil cases.

Appeals or writs of error in all such cases shall be taken within thirty days, shall be diligently prosecuted, and shall have precedence over all other appealed cases. Pending an appeal or writ of error by the United States the defendant shall be admitted to bail on his own recognizance: Provided, That if upon appeal or writ of error it shall be found that there was error in the rulings of the court during the trial, a verdict in favor of the defendant shall not be set aside. That hereafter all objections by the United States to the sufficiency of the indictment in matters of form or law shall be made and determined prior to the impaneling of the jury.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of this bill.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of this bill a question. I caught the amendment as best I could when it was read. I was necessarily detained from the Senate Chamwas read. ber when the amendment was adopted. As I understand the bill now, the Government can only appeal in a case where a demurrer has been sustained or where an indictment has been quashed or where there has been a conviction and an arrest of judgment when the constitutionality or the validity of the act is involved.

That is substantially it. Mr. NELSON.

Mr. CLAY. Before the amendment was adopted the bill provided that in all criminal cases where a demurrer has been sustained or an indictment quashed, regardless of the validity of the act, there should be an appeal, but now these amendments allow the Government to appeal simply in cases where the constitutionality of the act is questioned.

Mr. NELSON. Where the validity of the statute under which the indictment is framed is involved.

Mr. SPOONER. Or its construction.

Mr. CLAY. I will say to the Senator that I think this bill is very much improved by this amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota as to lines 19 and 20 of the bill:

In all these instances the United States shall be entitled to a bill of exceptions as in civil cases.

Is there any reason why that should remain in the bill now? Mr. NELSON. The object of having a bill of exceptions is to have a complete record made of the case. In case anything extraneous appears outside of the pleadings in the case it can be made a matter of record. It does not affect the appeal except to the extent of having a complete record sent up.

Mr. MALLORY. Every one of the points included in the amendment is covered by the record. A bill of exceptions, it

Mr. NELSON. The Senator may be right, but there can be no harm in having that in in case there should be anything of the kind.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not like that provision being in there. I move to strike out lines 19 and 20.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida, which will be stated. The Secretary. On page 2 strike out lines 19 and 20, in the following words: In all these instances the United States shall be entitled to a bill of exceptions as in civil cases.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions so to amend it as to accomplish its purpose regarding uniformity of decision and least affect the right of the defendant under existing law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary with the instructions, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the bill be so amended as to accomplish its purpose regarding uniformity of decisions and least affect the right of the defendant under existing law.

Mr. NELSON. I hope that will not be adopted. Mr. NEWLANDS. In framing the motion I have followed the language of the Senator from Wisconsin, that this legislation shall be so shaped as to secure the public interest and at the same time least affect the right of the defendant under ex-

Mr. SPOONER. While I am very well satisfied with my language, I shall vote against the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada to recommit with instructions.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let us have the bill as amended again read. The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Colorado, the Secretary will again read the bill as it has been amended.

The Secretary. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That a writ of error may be taken by and on behalf of the United States from the district or circuit courts to the Supreme Court or the circuit courts of appeals, as prescribed in an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the inrisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, and the acts amendatory thereof, in all criminal cases, in the following instances, to wit:

From a decision or judgment quashing, setting aside, or sustaining a demurrer to any indictment or any count thereof where the ground for such motion or demurrer is the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the indictment is founded.

From a decision arresting a judgment of conviction for insufficiency of the indictment, where the ground for the insufficiency thereof is the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the same is founded.

From the decision or judgment sustaining a special plea in bar, when the defendant has not been put in jeopardy.

Appeals or writs of error in all such cases shall be taken within thirty days, shall be diligently prosecuted, and shall have precedence over all other appealed cases. Pending an appeal or writ of error by the United States the defendant shall be admitted to bail on his own recognizance: Provided, That if upon appeal or writ of error it shall be found that there was error in the ruling of the court during the trial, a verdict in favor of the defendant shall not be set aside. That hereafter all objections by the United States to the sufficiency of the indictment in matters of form or law shall be made and determined prior to the impaneling of the jury.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the last sentence be reed again.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the last sentence be read again.

The Secretary read as follows:

That hereafter all objections by the United States to the insufficiency of the indictment in matters of form or law shall be made and determined prior to the impaneling of the jury.

Mr. RAYNER. That should be by the defendant. It is a mistake as it is. It ought to read "objections by the defend-

Mr. SPOONER. That clause is ridiculous.

Mr. NELSON. It is an amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn].

Mr. RAYNER. The United States will hardly object to its own indictment, I apprehend.

Mr. SPOONER. Strike out "by the United States," so that it will read "all objections." The Government does not generally demur to its own indictments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be regarded as open to amendment, and the Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The Secretary. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn] proposed, after the word "objections," to insert "by the United States.'

Mr. NELSON. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is to strike out the words "by the United States."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, be kind enough to have that paragraph read as it will stand if this amendment is agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. After "objections" strike out the words "by the United States;" so that if amended it will read:

That bereafter all objections to the sufficiency of the indictment in matters of form or law shall be made and determined prior to the impaneling of the jury.

Mr. CULBERSON. I was going to suggest that it is very doubtful whether under the Constitution you can require absolutely a defendant to plead to the constitutionality of an act prior to the impaneling of the jury, so as to bind him.

Mr. HALE. It is clearly an abridgment of the right of the accused to oblige him to make his objection at that stage. That is one of the worst features of the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to add merely that that matter was considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, and I do not believe I infringe any rule in stating that the committee was of the opinion that we could bind the defendant in this respect only as to the form of the indictment.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Texas will allow me, the words "or law" were injected into it upon motion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn]. They should be stricken

Mr. SPOONER. Of course.
Mr. NELSON. Then the amendment will be all right.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think so. I move to amend by striking out the words "or law."

Mr. HALE. Let us hear how it would read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. If amended, the amendment proposed by the committee will read as follows:

That hereafter all objections to the sufficiency of the indictment in atters of form only shall be made and determined prior to the impaneling of the jury.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the way it will read, if my suggestion is adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. HALE. That is very much better. It is now less of a restriction on the right of the accused, and it merely requires that an objection as to matter of form shall be made before the impaneling of the jury.

Mr. SPOONER. That is all. That is the way it came from the committee

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say to the Senator from Maine that the words "or law" were injected by the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn], and they ought to go out.

Mr. HALE. However they came in, they ought never to have been there

Mr. NELSON. I move to strike out the words.
Mr. HALE. They have already been stricken out.
Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest that the word "only" be re-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks that the word "only," which was stricken out, be reinserted. Without objection, it is agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like, before that is agreed to, to understand just how that leaves the provision.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It leaves the text as it was when the bill was reported from the committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. While I was necessarily absent from the Senate Chamber I understand that some change has been made in the amendment I offered and which was adopted. I should like to have the Secretary read the provision as it now stands before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

That hereafter all objections to the sufficiency of the indictment in matters of form only shall be made and determined prior to the impaneling of the jury.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suppose it is not too late, without reoffering the amendment, to insist on a consideration of the proposed amendment to strike out the amendment I offered and which had been adopted. Yesterday I presented the reasons why the words "by the United States" should be in the bill as a limitation upon that provision, and why, in my judgment, without a limitation this measure would leave the defendant without the right to urge objections to the sufficiency of the indictment or to the law under which the indictment was founded. It certainly was not the intention of the Judiciary Committee or of the Senate that the defendant should be foreclosed from interposing an objection to the indictment unless he had presented that objection before the impaneling of the jury. Under existing law that question may be raised by the defendant at any time up to the execution of the judgment, and to say now by this sweeping change in the law that that right which the defendant has always enjoyed shall be taken from him seems to me so radical that I am astonished that it can appeal to any

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. Either I misapprehend the Senator or there is some other grievous mistake here. It has been reported objections of the defendant to the indictment, either as to matters of form or as to matters of law, should be presented prior to the impaneling of the jury. Now, on my suggestion a mo-ment ago the words "or law" were stricken out to accomplish the very purpose which the Senator from Idaho now suggests ought to be accomplished, namely, to allow the defendant at any time to present a matter of law as an objection to an indictment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator misapprehends the purpose of the amendment which I introduced and which was adopted, by which the language in line 21 was amended so as to confine the limitation to the United States. As the law now is, the defendant may take advantage of a defective indictment or of the fact that the law under which the indictment is found is in violation of the Constitution of the United States. He may now take that exception to it at any time up to the time of execution.

If this measure is enacted into law as reported by the Judiciary Committee, the defendant could no longer exercise the right which he now has, because the provision contained in line 21 does not limit the right of exception to the Government of the United States, but it says that hereafter "all objections"—that would be objections on the part of the United States or on the part of the defendant—"all objections to the sufficiency of the indictment shall be made and determined prior to the impan-eling of the jury." That certainly was not the intention of the committee which reported the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield. to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. SPOONER. Did the Senator ever know a district attorney to move to quash an indictment or to demur to it as being bad in law?

Mr. HEYBURN: The district attorney, of course, would not move to quash his own indictment.

Mr. SPOONER. And he represents— Mr. HEYBURN. And what I have said has nothing to do with quashing an indictment.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator inserted "objections by the United States." Who would represent the United States but the district attorney?

Mr. HEYBURN. That criticism would be correct if the provision was confined simply to a motion to quash the indictment. But the provision read altogether is that "hereafter all objections

Mr. SPOONER. By the United States. Mr. HEYBURN. Whether or not the indictment is authorized under the law, whether or not the law is unconstitutional, are included within that term—"all objections." The very purpose of this legislation purports to be that the United States may take an exception against an indictment; and not only may—that is certainly the purport of it—but the language of it seems to me much broader than was apprehended by the committee which reported it. The language is more general. Of course the indictment emanating from the Government would not be objected to by the Government. We all know that. The Government would have no purpose in objecting to the indictment. But suppose that a ruling upon the indictment held that it should be quashed or that a demurrer to it should be sustained, then this is intended to allow the Government of the United States to appeal from that decision, and when the provision contained in lines 21, 22, and 23 is enacted into law, the Government could retain the right to test that question by virtue of the provisions of that paragraph.

Mr. RAYNER. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. RAYNER. Has the Senator ever heard of a case in which the Government of the United States has demurred to an indictment or objected to it or made a motion to quash it upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of the law on which the indictment is found?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I have not heard of such a case, nor has anybody else, because the indictment emanates from the Government itself. It is the Government's charge against the defendant.

Mr. RAYNER. What does the Senator mean by the United States objecting to an indictment?

Mr. HEYBURN. The amendment goes further than the mere The amendment goes to the test of the whole question both by the Government and by the defendant.

Mr. CULBERSON. Either I misapprehend the Senator or there is some other grievous mistake here. It has been reported from the desk that on motion of the Senator from Idaho an amendment had been adopted which in effect provided that all

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me a moment-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.
Mr. SPOONER. I will explain what the purpose of the committee was in the use of that language.

The committee realized very well that there were matters of objection which the defendant could not be deprived of the right to make at any time during the progress of the trial, even after verdict, and even if he had been conscious of their existence before trial. But the committee dealt only with objections made involving mere matters of form.

It was the notion of the committee that where counsel for defendant knows, as he generally does, of a mere defect of form in an indictment he should state it seasonably, and if it is sustained by the court a new indictment can be framed, it can be corrected, and corrected properly, and not withhold it until the Government and the people had been put to the expense of a long trial on the facts, and then, when the jury has passed upon the merits of the case and found a verdict of guilty, bring forth this point, purely technical and not substantial, which has been kept concealed all the days to avail of it on a motion in arrest of judgment.

That is all the committee had in view, and that is why it limited this language to matters of form only. The Senator moved to insert, and the Senate agreed to it, after the word "only," the words "or of law," and to insert also, after the word "objections," the words "by the United States;" so that Hereafter all objections by the United States to the sufficiency of the indictment in matters of form only or of law shall be made and determined prior to the impaneling of the jury.

That must have been inadvertently done, because the Senator is a very able lawyer, and has had large experience, and I am quite sure that he misconceived the purpose of the committee and would not himself stand for the reinsertion of the words "by the United States" or of the word "law." The Senator will not claim that the Congress can deprive-I will not say it could not be done, because so far as the power to regulate practice is concerned it is very large in the Congress, just as it is in the States-but the Congress would not see fit to deprive a defendant of the right to make any objection at any time during or after the trial, except as to matters that are purely technical and unsubstantial.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I thought in this measure. on the part of the committee reporting it-and I say it with all due regard and respect for the ability and the conscientious judgment of that committee-I discovered either an inadvertence or, what has been sometimes termed in unparliamentary language, a "joker" in this bill. The bill purports to be one for the purpose of enlarging the powers of the United States, and it is not fair to suppose that the committee intended while upon the face of the measure which purported to be for the enlargement of the powers of the United States a provision should be made limiting the rights of a defendant. It was to develop that that I interposed the objection.

Now, it must be admitted by Senators that the provision in lines 21, 22, and 23 constitutes a limitation on the present powers of a defendent charged with an offense under the law by the United States. The Senator from Wisconsin practically admits that that is the effect of it by inserting the words that I have proposed as an amendment. Whether it gives any force or effect to that provision of the statute or not, it certainly expresses the intention on the part of the Senate that this bill should not limit the powers and the rights of a defendant. If I am not right in that, then that provision should go out of the bill entirely.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Idaho allow me a minute? Let us look at the situation as it clearly is and as the bill is now amended. As it is now amended the scope of the bill is limited to the question of how the validity of a statute is involved: in other words, the constitutionality. Those are the involved; in other words, the constitutionality. Those are the only cases in which an appeal is taken; and in view of the amendment, this whole provision may well be stricken out.

Mr. SPOONER. Let it go out.

Mr. HEYBURN. I agree with the Senator from Minnesota that this provision should be stricken out entirely, and leave the bill to perform the function for which it was originally drafted; but if it is to remain in, it must be guarded.

Mr. NELSON. If no objection is made by my colleagues on the committee, in view of the amendments that have been adopted this morning, I move that that paragraph be stricken from the bill.

Mr. HALE. The last paragraph?

Mr. NELSON. The paragraph that is under discussion now. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the para-

The Secretary. On page 2, strike out all of the last paragraph, in lines 21, 22, and 23, in the following words:

That hereafter all objections to the sufficiency of the indictment in matters of form only shall be made and determined before the impaneling of the jury.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, Mr. President, with the provisions in lines 21, 22, and 23 stricken out, the bill is not to be held to deal with the rights of the defendant at all. If I am correct in that, then I should content myself with the elimination of this provision from the bill. But even though it might be inconsistent with the law and with the facts that the Government could not demur or attack its own indictment, if it was to remain in the bill it should be so expressed, even though it might amount to an absurdity on its face, as to make it clear that no right which the defendant now has under the law is to be taken from him.

Mr. HALE. Except that the Government undoubtedly gets additional rights.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Government does get additional rights to prolong the litigation against the defendant. Whether that shall result in harassing the defendant or not is a serious question and one that appeals strongly to my mind. clined to believe that the Government has a right now to test the constitutionality of a statute under existing law. that right in many States, as in our State. That can not go beyond the mere questioning of the constitutionality of a law or of the right to indict under a law. Those questions ought to be tested, but it ought not to be done at the expense either of time or any other class of embarrassment against the defendant.

If the bill stands with those lines stricken out, which of course carry out all amendments that have been made to those lines, then I am content.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the amendment as amended be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill as amended will be read, at the request of the Senator from Idaho.

The Secretary. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

insert:

That a writ of error may be taken by and on behalf of the United States from the district or circuit courts to the Supreme Court or the circuit courts of appeals, as prescribed in an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, and the acts amendatory thereof, in all criminal cases, in the following instances, to wit:

From a decision or judgment quashing, setting aside, or sustaining a demurrer to any indictment, or any count thereof, where the ground for such motion or demurrer is the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the indictment is founded.

From a decision arresting a judgment of conviction for insufficiency of the indictment, where the ground of insufficiency thereof is the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the same is founded. From the decision or judgment sustaining a special plea in bar, when the defendant has not been put in jeopardy.

Appeals or writs of error in all such cases shall be taken within thirty days, shall be diligently prosecuted, and shall have precedence over all other appealed cases.

Pending an appeal or writ of error by the United States the defendant shall not papeal or writ of error it shall be found that there was error in the rulings of the court during the trial, a verdict in favor of the defendant shall not be set aside.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the amendment I send to the desk. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 14, after line 3, it is proposed to insert:

Insert:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized, in their discretion and when the interests of the consumers of water in the District of Columbia will not suffer thereby, to permit the towns of Takoma, Md., and Chevy Chase, Md., to connect their water system with the water distribution system of the District of Columbia at points where said water system of said towns meet the water distribution system of said vowns meet the water distribution system of said District of Columbia at the District line, and to furnish such towns with water for use in extinguishing fires and in such other cases of emergency or necessity as the said Commissioners may deem proper: Provided, That the said towns shall make an annual payment for such privilege, the amount of same to be fixed by said Commissioners from time to time in their discretion: And provided further, That the expense of making such connection shall be borne by the towns of Takoma, Md. and Chevy Chase, Md., respectively, and said towns shall pay such charges for the use of such water as may be determined from time to time in advance by said Commissioners, such payments to be made at such times and under such regulations as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may deem proper.

On hearing the pending bill read I notice that Mr. KEAN. On hearing the pending bill read I notice that additional facilities are wanted to supply Washington itself with water. So I think it would be rather out of the way to give the water that the people of Washington want to places in Maryland. I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator from New Jersey to withdraw the point of order until I explain?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly; I withhold it.
Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to say that these towns are in Maryland and adjoin the District of Columbia at the District line. They are towns that are built up quite closely and have their own water systems. The District of Columbia is also being built up adjoining these towns. houses are constantly being constructed. It has been the custom hitherto, whenever a fire occurred outside of the District of Columbia line for the District fire department to go to the rescue; and on the other hand, I believe, it has been the custom of these towns, whenever the opportunity offered, to help in the rescue of buildings in the District of Columbia. These towns both have their water systems, but there may be such a conflagration as may exhaust the water in either of those systems. It might, of course, be greatly to the injury of the houses in the District of Columbia adjoining these towns if a conflagration should take place, and besides neighborliness demands that if there is water aid shall be given.

Under this amendment, which has been approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, it is provided simply that connection may be had at the District line, the water to be used only in case of fire or other emergency or necessity, and the power is given to the District Commissioners to impose upon these towns any charge they choose, in their discretion, for the service, and an annual payment is to be exacted simply for the right of connection.

Washington now gets its water supply from the Potomac, which is the great source of supply of this entire region. It would be a great economic waste to compel those towns to lay great mains through Maryland to the Potomac River in order to provide for these extraordinary emergencies, and as the pipes of Washington are very large and the supply is almost inexhaustible, and the supply to be used is only in a case of fire or other emergency or necessity, the Senator will readily see that the District supply will not be drawn upon to any injurious extent.

This is a matter of mutual protection—protection to the District as well as to these neighboring towns-and I will state that right in this bill we find a provision, which has already been enacted into law, providing for the drainage of ten houses on Magnolia avenue, Takoma Park, D. C., into the sewer system of Takoma Park, Md.

Mr. KEAN. That is sewerage. Mr. NEWLANDS. That is sewerage. But it shows the spirit The sewer system of Takoma Park, Md., is to of neighborliness. take care of the sewage of these ten houses in Takoma Park which are in the District of Columbia. It is a matter of economy to the District of Columbia to utilize the sewerage system of the Maryland town. That has already been enacted into law

I ask the Senator from New Jersey not to interpose this objection and to let this provision go into the bill, to be considered hereafter in conference by the conferees, and I am sure it will be properly disposed of by them.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise simply to correct the Senator from Nevada, if he will permit me, in reference to that sewerage ar-The Senator from Nevada says it has been enacted rangement. It is in this bill, and we have passed favorably upon it, as we did once before, but it was lost in conference.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What I mean to say is that it has been put into this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.
Mr. NEWLANDS. By way of amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And represents the judgment of the Senate upon the question of the neighborliness between the District of Columbia and the adjoining town of Takoma, in the one case the District of Columbia making use of the sewer system of the town of Takoma, Md., in the other one, now pending, the town of Takoma making use of the water system of the District of Columbia in case of great emergency, according to rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and upon the payments provided for, which are to be fully compensatory, to be also decided by the District of Columbia.

I ask the Senator from New Jersey to withdraw the point of order and let the amendment be passed upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey

Insist upon the point of order?

Mr. KEAN. I think I ought to insist upon the point of order; but if we can pass the bill now, I will withdraw it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

AGRICULTURAL BANK IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 6249) to provide for the establishment of an agricultural bank in the Philippine Islands.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Philippines with amend-

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the first reading of the bill be disensed with, that the bill be read for amendments, and that pensed with, that the bill be read for amendments, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendments, and that the committee amendments be first considered. In the absence of objection that course will be pursued. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 8, after the word "invested," to insert "by individuals or corporations;" so as to make the paragraph read:

That for the purpose of aiding in the establishment and operation of such an agricultural bank in the Philippine Islands as the general government thereof may hereafter specifically authorize the Philippine government is empowered to guarantee an income of not exceeding 4 per cent per annum upon cash capital actually invested by individuals or corporations in such agricultural bank; such guaranty shall be granted by an act of the Philippine Commission which shall contain, among others, the following provisions.

among others, the following provisions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 1, after the word "with," to strike out "headquarters" and insert "its principal office;" in line 2, after the word "and," to insert "with;" and in line 3, before the word "parts," to strike out "various" and insert "such;" and in the same line, after the word "islands," to insert "as may be designated by the Philippine Commission;" so as to make the paragraph read:

First. The guaranty shall be made to a company organized under the laws of the Philippine Islands, with its principal office in Manila and with branches in such parts of the islands as may be designated by the Philippine Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 5, after the word "except," to strike out "for" and insert "to those engaged in agriculture and with;" and in line 6, after the word "the," to insert "sole;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Second. The bank shall not grant loans except to those engaged in agriculture and with the sole purpose of assisting agriculture in the Philippine Islands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 9, after the word "made," to strike out "except upon the written authorization of the secretary of finance and justice of the Philippine Islands;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Third. No loan exceeding in amount $5,000 shall be made.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that this amendment may be disagreed to. The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 14, before the word 'hundred" to strike out "five" and insert "four;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Fourth. Interest charged on loans shall not exceed 10 per cent per annum: Provided, That in no event shall the total annual contingent liability under the guaranties authorized by this act at any time exceed $400,000, and no such guaranty shall continue for a longer period than twenty-five years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 18, after the word "shall," to strike out "establish" and insert "provide;" and in line 24, after the word "the," to strike out "finances" and insert "business;" so as to make the paragraph read:

For the further security of the Philippine government said government shall provide by the aforesaid act proper rules, including those for determining the cash capital actually invested in such bank and the net income actually received on said capital so invested, and shall provide for supervision by said Philippine government, through the auditing and other appropriate bureaus thereof, of the conduct of the business of the bank.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 5, to strike out the following paragraph:

The aforesaid act of the Philippine government shall provide for the reimbursement to the Philippine government of all payments made under the guaranty authorized by this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 9, to insert the following as an additional section:

following as an additional section:

Sec. 2. That money paid by the Philippine government pursuant to the aforementioned guaranty shall be a liability of the bank to the Philippine government, and, as such, shall constitute a lien upon the annual net profits of the bank, subject only to the right of the stock-holder to receive therefrom 4 per cent dividends per annum upon the bank's cash paid-up capital stock. No dividends above 4 per cent shall be paid, and no profits credited to the surplus fund, either during the period of the government's guaranty or subsequent thereto, until the Philippine government shall have been repaid in full all sums advanced to the bank under said guaranty.

Obligations of the bank to the Philippine government arising from advances made pursuant to the aforementioned guaranty and existing at the time when the bank shall go into liquidation shall constitute a lien on the bank's assets, subject only to the payment of the bank's legitimate debts and the repayment to the stockholders of the par value of the bank's duly authorized cash paid-up capital stock. Provided, That nothing in this section shall be interpreted as a guaranty on the part of the Philippine government to the stockholders of the bank of the par value of the bank's cash paid-up capital stock when the bank of the par value of the bank's cash paid-up capital stock when the bank shall go into liquidation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 7, to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 3. That the bank shall not be permitted to hold real estate beyond that required for business premises: Provided, That the temporary acquisition of land as the result of foreclosure, or otherwise, on account of a debt, shall be permitted on condition that land so acquired shall be sold within a reasonable time from the date of acquisition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, the object of the bill under consideration is "to provide for the establishment of an agricultural bank in the Philippine Islands," and thus benefit the Philippine Islands, and especially those engaged in agriculture.

Justice and fair play demand other legislation more important than this for the Philippine Islands, and I can not understand why the dominant party in the United States Senate should hesitate to do that which has been recommended by the President of the United States and by the Secretary of War, and which has been almost unanimously supported by the Members of the House of Representatives, and which the people of the Philippine Islands not only desire, but to which they are entitled.

I therefore offer, Mr. President, an amendment to the bill now under consideration, which I send to the desk to be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky proposes an amendment, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary. Add at the end of the bill two new sections, as fellows:

The Secretary. Add at the end of the bill two new sections, as follows:

Sec. 4. That on and after the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon all like articles imported from foreign countries: Provided, That all articles wholly the growth and product of the Philippine Islands coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands shall hereafter be admitted free of duty, except sugar, tobacco, and rice, manufactured and unmanufactured upon which there shall be levied, collected, and paid only 25 per cent of the rates of duty quited hereby to be levied, collected, and paid upon products of the Philippine Islands coming into the United States shall be less any duty or taxes levied, collected, and paid thereon upon the shipment thereof from the Philippine Islands as provided by law, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; but all articles wholly the growth and product of the Philippine Islands admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty under the provisions of this act and sumply direct States free of duty under the provisions of this act and sumply in herein shall be hereafter exempt from any export duties imposed in the Philippine Islands. Provided, however, That in consideration of the rates of duty aforesaid, sugar and robacco, both manufactured and unmanufactured, wholly the growth and product of the United States, shall be admitted to the Philippine Islands from the United States free of duty; and provided further, That on and after the 14th day of April, 1909, all articles and merchandise going from the United States into the Philippine Islands shall be admitted free of duty; And provided further, That in addition to said duty when levied and in case said articles are admitted into the United States from the Philippine Islands shall be admitted free of duty; And provided furthe

Mr. McCREARY. I have the floor. I have not yielded the floor. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Massachusetts? Mr. McCREARY. I will yield to the Senator from Massachusetts for a question, not for a motion.

Mr. LODGE. I am not going to make a motion. I am simply going to say that no one can be more earnestly in favor of the Philippine tariff bill, as it is known, than myself, but

Mr. McCREARY. I will not yield to the Senator from Massa-

Mr. LODGE. I am not going to make a speech, but, Mr. President, offering this amendment kills the bill, because it will never reach a vote, and I desire to withdraw the bill. The Senator can make his speech, of course. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to withdraw the bill. The Senator can make his speech.

Mr. McCREARY. I did not yield to the Senator and he can not withdraw the bill, and it can not be withdrawn when I yield the floor, except by consent of a majority.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the Senator will yield to me a moment, I will not interpose a point of order, but—
Mr. McCREARY. I do not yield to the Senator from Colo-

Mr. PATTERSON. I simply give notice that I will make the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. McCREARY. No, sir; I do not yield to anyone.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. McCREARY. This amendment proposed by me is a copy of the bill which passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 259 to 71, being a majority of 188, with only 14 Demo-crats voting against it, and not one from the State of Kentucky. This proposed legislation for the benefit of the Philippine Islands was reported to the Senate during the last session of the Congress, after the bill passed the House of Representatives, on the 16th day of January, 1906, and referred to the Committee on the Philippines, and it has never been reported by that committee to the Senate, either favorably or unfavorably, but it is still sleeping in that committee, where it is likely to remain as unnoticed and unhonored as if it were in the tomb of the Capu-

The amendment I offer, which, as I said before, is the same as the bill passed by the House of Representatives, provides for the admission of all the products of the Philippine Islands into the United States free of duty, except sugar, tobacco, and rice, and upon these a duty is imposed equal to 25 per cent of the rates of what is known as the Dingley Act, and on and after the 11th day of April, 1909, all articles and merchandise going from the United States into the Philippine Islands and all articles wholly the growth and product of the Philippine Islands coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands shall be admitted free of duty.

According to existing law Philippine sugar, tobacco, and rice pay duties equal to 75 per cent of the Dingley rates, and the proposed amendment, if adopted, will reduce the rates of duty to 25 per cent for two years, or until the 11th day of April, 1909, on all sugar, tobacco, and rice, and establish free trade immediately on all other products exported to the United States from the Philippine Islands or imported into the Philippine Islands from the United States.

Prior to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in 1902 in the case of Fourteen Diamond Rings, Emil J. Pepke claim against the United States, U. S. Reports, 183, the full duties provided by the Dingley Act were enforced and collected on the products of the Philippine Islands. In that case the Supreme Court held that the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands is not a foreign country and the Dingley tariff rates did not apply, and then an act was passed by Congress March 8, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," which imposed the 75 per cent rate.

As the Philippine Islands are possessions of the United States, and our Government paid $20,000,000 for them, there should be free trade with them both ways. We should have free trade free trade with them both ways. We should have free trade between the United States and all her possessions. The Constitution of the United States guarantees absolute free trade between the different States of the American Union, and we have free-trade relations between the United States and our Territorial possessions of Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, as well as our home Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Indian Territory (Oklahoma and Indian Territory soon to be admitted as a State). Even Cuba has been given a 20 per cent preferential rate over other countries in her commercial dealings with our Republic. The time has come when there should no longer be a tariff burden placed on trade between the United States and our trans-Pacific possessions.

Common justice, business fairness, and public policy demand that the Philippine Islands should not be treated as American territory for certain purposes and as foreign territory other purposes. Our alien contract labor laws, our immigration laws, and our navigation laws have been extended to and enforced in the Philippine Islands, and we should not hesitate or delay doing justice to the people of the Philippine Islands. In this connection I read the very appropriate expression of the distinguished Secretary of War, Hon. William H. Taft. He said:

distinguished Secretary of War, Hoh. William H. Tatt. He said:

If we are sincere; if we are conscientious in our proposition to the Filipinos, then we have no right to deny them the benefit which commercial association and freedom of trade, as a part of our civilization, will give them, and the Filipinos will question the good faith of our declaration that we are there for their good when we decline to open our ports to their products and refuse to give them the benefits of the markets of this great country for the things which they have to sell. have to sell.

The Philippine Commission, composed of four intelligent and thoroughly informed Americans and three citizens of the Philippine Islands, with Governor Luke E. Wright, as president of the Commission, filed their annual report for the year ending November 1, 1905. In that report they say:

In every report made by the Commission it has urged the repeal of, or at least a large reduction in, the duties imposed by the tariff laws of the United States upon exports of sugar and tobacco from the Philippine Islands to the United States. We now renew our recommendations in this behalf. The reasons which we have so often presented still remain in full force. * * * There is only a limited area of lands adapted to the profitable cultivation of tobacco, and the quality produced is generally poor. Even if the markets of the United States were open to Philippine tobacco, the crude methods obtaining in farming and the conservatism of the people make it certain that no very large increase in output can be expected for many years to come. Even if all the tobacco produced or to be produced in the Philippine Islands now or in the future were exported to the United States and consumed there, it would be so insignificant a proportion of the total amount of tobacco used by the people of the United States that it could not by a possibility disturb the home market, but, as a matter of fact, the greater portion of the output here (in the Philippine Islands) must be consumed here. The only effect of the abolition of existing duties in the United States on Philippine tobacco, either now or for years to come, would be simply to enable the producer to obtain a living price. * * The area of the lands upon which sugar can be profitably grown in these islands is comparatively small, the supply of native labor is limited, and there is no probability of a change in the policy of the Government of the United States forbidding the importation of Chinese or other foreign labor. * * While the removal by Congress of the duties upon Philippine sugars imported into the United States would at once relieve the desperate situation of the planters and inspire hope where now only despair is found, the idea that sugar can ever become a serious menace to home-grown sugar is little short of absurdity. absurdity.

Mr. President, while I am in favor of free trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands, I believe that can not be immediately obtained. Also the treaty of Paris, under which the United States acquired the Philippine Islands, provides that Spain shall have the same advantages in tariff duties on exports to the Philippine Islands that the United States receives for a period of ten years. In other words, we have a treaty engagement with Spain that she is to have the same treatment as the United States in commercial and industrial relations up to April 11. 1909, which is the time fixed in the amendment offered by me for free trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands. The Philippine Islands are our possessions. Their people have come under our care. We are bound by every national and honorable obligation to study and promote their The acquisition brings problems which are difficult and perplexing, but we should fall short of the qualities of a great people and a great nation if we shrank from them.

It is all right for the Committee on the Philippines to report the bill to establish an agricultural bank in the Philippines, and I may say that I am in favor of the bill, but I believe the time has come when there should be other legislation, and as there has been no opportunity whatever for me to bring up the bill that passed the House of Representatives nearly unanimously, I have sought this occasion to bring before the Senate the Philippine tariff bill. My amendment is the same as the bill which passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McCREARY. For what purpose?
Mr. PATTERSON. For a question.
Mr. McCREARY. I will yield for a question.
Mr. PATTERSON. That is all. The Senator from Kentucky states that he is in favor of the agricultural banking bill reported from the committee upon the ground that it is a good and a needful measure. If the Senator from Kentucky were convinced that the pressing of this amendment would necessarily defeat the banking bill, that it would induce the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines to withdraw the bill altogether, would he nevertheless press his amendment?

Mr. McCREARY. I heard the Senator from Massachusetts say it was his intention to withdraw the bill, but I believe when the Senator from Massachusetts has time to think about it he will not withdraw the bill. There is no reason why the bill to establish an agricultural bank should not be passed, and there is no good reason, in my opinion, why we should not comply with the recommendation of the President in his message and with the recommendation of the Secretary of War, William H. Taft, and with the overwhelming vote in the United States House of Representatives. In addition to this the agricultural bill having been reported to the Senate, and now under consideration, the Senator from Massachusetts can not under the rules of the Senate withdraw it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator referred to me. My objection to the amendment is twofold. One is that if pressed it would lead to endless discussion-

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I decline to yield. Mr. LODGE. And it is also unconstitutional, I will say.

Mr. McCREARY. The Senator from Massachusetts can interject remarks when out of order, if it is agreeable to him. I did not yield to him.

Mr. LODGE. I asked permission of the Senator from Kentucky and he yielded the floor, and then took it away.

Mr. McCREARY. I did not yield it. I yielded to the Senator from Colorado. If the Senator from Massachusetts asked me to yield, I did not hear him. I will be ready to discuss any point of order at the proper time, whether it is that my amendment is not germane or that it is unconstitutional, but I do not believe that either will be seriously made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I regret that there should be so much feeling manifested against legislation that is recommended by the President and that has passed the House of Representatives almost unanimously. I do not understand it. am in favor of this legislation, and I have a right in my way to present it; and if I desire to make a speech upon it, I have a right to speak upon it. I am always ready to yield to the will of the majority. If a majority vote down my amendment, then I will yield to the will of the majority. But I shall insist upon this amendment being voted upon, and I shall insist upon being heard upon it and giving my reasons for it.

was not in favor of the acquisition of the Philippine Islands, and I will be glad to see them independent. I was opposed to the new policy of our Government in purchasing the Philippine Archipelago, composed of many islands 7,000 miles away from our country, with a population of 7,000,000 people, but we have acquired these islands and our flag floats over them, and only a few months ago the Senate confirmed the appointment of a citizen of Vermont, Hon. Henry C. Ide, who was nominated by President Roosevelt as governor of the Philippine Islands, and Hon. William H. Taft, of Ohio, and Hon. Luke E. Wright, of Tennessee, have each acted as governor of the Philippine Islands under appointment by the President of the United States.

The dominant political party declares we will retain these islands at least until the people are prepared for self-government, and this can not be done in less than a generation, and many say it will require several generations. In the meantime they are a part of our common country and are entitled to fair play and free trade. We can not continue to govern these islands and claim ownership of them while commercially and industrially we make them a foreign country. The United States should do one of two things—get out of the Philippine Islands or treat them as a part of our country. We should give them free trade or we should grant them complete independence.

It was published in the newspapers that when the Taft party of Senators and Representatives and other persons were visit-ing the Philippine Islands in 1905 a Filipino spoke in Tagalog language at one of the entertainments and made the following appropriate and unanswerable speech:

GENTLEMEN: I want to ask two questions. If the Philippine Islands are a part of the United States territory, why are they not entitled, as a matter of right, to the admission of their goods to the mother country free of duty? If they are not a part of the United States territory, why are they not entitled to their independence?

As far as I have been informed no response was made to this speech. It is alleged that the revenue to be derived from the duties now imposed on sugar, tobacco, and rice is necessary for the maintenance of the Philippine government. Revenue was needed as much or more when free trade was allowed to Porto Rico and Hawaii as it is needed by the Philippine Islands; besides the necessity for revenue does not excuse injustice and wrong, and our country should not appear to sanction wrong for a money consideration. In the memorable words of President McKinley-

The Philippines are ours not to exploit, but to develope, to civilize, to educate, to train in the science of self-government. This is the path of duty which we must follow or be recreant to a mighty trust committed to us.

Therefore, Mr. President, we should not compel them to sub-mit to laws and regulations of our devising, in which they have no voice, and pay burdensome taxes we levy upon them and then confront them with the Dingley tariff law when they wish to trade with us.

Progress, improvement, and advancement are written all over our Republic, and the tender and glorious sentiment "on earth peace, good will toward men" rings through our land. We have given the Filipinos government, courts, schools, railroads, telegraphs, and helped to improve rivers and harbors, and done much to contribute to their happiness and general welfare, and by the decision of our highest court and by our govern-mental policy and by our legislation declared the Philippine Islands to be wholly domestic and part and parcel of our country. We should now see to it that justice to them should not be retarded, but speedily they should be made to realize that whatever their future may be the principal factor in solving their greatest problem is the Government of the United States, and whatever the result may be in these islands, where progress and civilization have achieved so little in centuries, the United States are the instruments for their uplifting, for their aggrandizement, for their prosperity, and for their independence.

Mr. President, I pass by an important lesson in history that "free nations can not govern subject provinces." I pass by the fact that the acquisition of the Philippines meant subjugation and forcible annexation, and that it did not mean legitimate expansion, such as Jefferson taught, that it meant a larger standing Army and greater Navy, the beginning of conquest and acquisition which may grow and increase as the years roll by, and no man can foretell the extent or the disaster which may I pass by also the open door of opportunity in the Orient, which I hope will benefit the commercial and industrial interests of our Republic. I pass by also the expenditure by our Government of hundreds of millions of dollars of money in the Philippines which I hope will come back "like bread cast upon the waters" to bless the Philippines, if not us; and I pass by the multitude of American soldiers who have given their lives while doing duty in the Philippine Islands. These are great and interesting problems, but I have not time to discuss them now. I hope and believe revolving years will solve them. I will say, however, that no possessions of the United States, no area of country of the same size, has ever attracted so much attention, demanded the presence of so many soldiers, required so much legislation and visitation, and so great expenditure of money, or been the source of such varied and contradictory opinions as the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, a reduction of the duties upon sugar, tobacco, and rice of the Philippines from 75 per cent to 25 per cent of the Dingley duties is a measure of tariff reform. I prefer the reduction proposed to no reduction. It is in accordance with Democratic doctrine to reduce the rates of the Dingley tariff law whenever it is possible, and it is better to impose on the people of the Philippine Islands only 25 per cent of injustice than to force upon them 75 per cent of injustice. If we can not get free trade in the Philippines immediately, it is better to have it two years hence than not at all.

In this connection I wish to say that the annual report of the Philippine Commissioners shows that the American administration of the islands is increasing the welfare of the inhabitants, and the conditions in the archipelago are better than before the Americans took charge. The islands are generally peaceful, and the people have been brought to a condition of established order and immunity from constant insurrection. They have been given opportunities for education infinitely superior to those heretofore offered them. They have been permitted to share in the administration of public affairs, with promise of extension as their improvement and fitness justify. They are raising a larger share than ever of their own necessities, and their exports have increased by more than two millions over the previous year, while their imports have decreased by more than $2,300,000.

By the aid of the United States they will soon have hundreds of miles of railroads. They have been encouraged to adopt improved methods of agriculture, and the passage of the bill under consideration "to provide for the establishment of an agricultural bank in the Philippine Islands" will, according to the testimony of capable and experienced men who have watched the success of the agricultural bank in Egypt, be very beneficial.

Opposition to the legislation proposed comes from the producers of sugar, tobacco, and rice, and, so far as tobacco is concerned, the opposition comes mainly from those engaged in the manufacture of cigars. They desire the tariff rates to remain unchanged. The opposition has greatly magnified the productive capacity of the Philippine Islands and the industrial capacity of the Filipinos and they have greatly magnified the importance of the Philippine Islands in all commercial and industrial matters which concern sugar, tobacco, and rice. Therefore it is necessary to describe the Philippine Islands, distant from our country about 7,000 miles.

According to the figures of the Philippine agricultural bureau, the total area of the Philippine Archipelago is 73,000,000 acres, of which 50,000,000 acres are forest and mountainous lands, practically worthless for agricultural purposes; and of the remaining 23,000,000, 3,200,000 acres are cultivated in crops as follows: Sugar, 180,000 acres; rice, 1,600,000 acres; tobacco, 80,000 acres; sweet potatoes, 60,000 acres; plantains, 85,000 acres; hemp, 550,000 acres; cocoanuts, 375 acres; corn, 267 acres.

In our country we are in the habit of talking about square miles instead of acres. According to the report of G. R. Putnam, in charge of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey in the Philippine Islands, the area of the Philippine Islands is 115,026 square miles, and therefore the archipelago called the Philippine Islands is not as large as Texas, which is 265,780 square miles, or California, which is 158,360 square miles, or Montana which is 146,080 square miles

Montana, which is 146,080 square miles.

According to the census of the Philippine Islands taken under the direction of the Philippine Commission in 1903 there are two islands with areas exceeding 10,000 square miles each, namely, Luzon, with 40,269 square miles, and Mindanao with 36,292 square miles. There are nine islands each of which has an area of more than 1,000 square miles; twenty islands containing 100 to 1,000 square miles; seventy-three between 10 and 100 square miles; 263 between 1 and 10 square miles, and 2,775, or seveneighths of all, have areas less than 1 square mile each, and there are twelve volcanoes that have been in eruption within historic times.

A large amount of testimony has been taken by the Senate Committee on the Philippines, of which I am a member, which I have carefully examined, and I have also looked over much of the testimony taken by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and I am satisfied that neither our sugar, tobacco, nor rice industries will be appreciably affected by Philippine competition.

The average consumption of raw sugar in the world is about 10,000,000 tons annually. Sometimes it is a little below these figures and sometimes it rises a little above them. In the year 1905 there were 11,973,000 tons of raw sugar produced in the world, 7,065,000 tons of beet sugar and 4,908,000 tons of cane sugar. We consumed in the United States in 1904, the last year for which I can obtain complete figures, 2,767,162 tons of sugar, our per capita consumption being about 72 pounds per annum. In the various States of the United States we produced only 585,000 tons of sugar, being 265,000 tons of beet sugar and 320,000 tons of cane sugar. We received from Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Philippines in 1904 409,270 tons, and from foreign countries in 1904 we imported 1,798,381 tons. In 1904 82,000 tons of sugar were exported from the Philippine Islands, of which 25,000 tons came to the United States. It is, therefore, perfectly plain that if the whole amount of exported sugar from the Philippine Islands had come to the United States it would have been hardly a drop in the bucket compared with our production and our immense importation of sugar.

The same opposition and the same cry of injury to the sugar industry was raised when Porto Rico and Cuban sugars were under consideration, yet both the cane and beet sugar industries have continued to flourish. In the face of free imports from the productive plantations of Hawaii beet-sugar farming in California has expanded and the mills have prospered, and it seems clear to my mind that if we have to import from foreign countries nearly 2,000,000 tons of sugar every year to meet the domestic demand, the small supply from the Philippines can not affect prices adversely. It should be remembered also that there are 550,000 acres of land in hemp in the Philippines, which is double the number of acres of land now in sugar and tobacco in those islands, and an acre of hemp pays three or four times as much in cash as an acre of tobacco or an acre of sugar, and as they have a monopoly of manila hemp and the supply is not near equal to the demand, therefore every acre of land that can be planted in hemp will be devoted to hemp. After more than a hundred years of sugar production in the Philippine Islands the available sugar lands are not extensive, eighttenths of the sugar being produced in the island of Negros. In advocating the proposed legislation I can not see how the sugar industry of the United States can be injured. I want this industry to continue to flourish, and most of those who have carefully studied the question, unless they are directly or in-directly interested in raw sugar or in refining, have declared that the sugar industry in the United States will not be injured by the proposed reduction of the tariff on the Philippine product.

In this connection I quote the testimony of De la Rama, who is corroborated by the highest authority upon the beet-sugar industry in the United States. Mr. De la Rama says:

industry in the United States. Mr. De la Rama says:

Even if we were to introduce modern methods of manufacture, by bringing in modern machinery, it would, in my opinion, take at least five years before we could get the plants properly established in these islands. I believe, furthermore, that it would take fifteen years longer to be able to get all conditions so favorable as to make a crop in the Philippine Islands which would aggregate 300,000 tons; so that, counting in the five years taken to construct modern machinery and the fifteen years that the industry would need to develop to the point of producing 300,000 tons, and we have twenty years as the period which would be required to reach that figure. It is estimated that the cost of machinery capable of producing 300,000 tons of sugar would be $20,000,000 gold. This, of course, must be considered as a mere estimate; but I consider that sum to be the cost of machinery necessary to produce 300,000 tons. If we take that as a basis in the length of time required before we could reach that production which I have above cited, the markets of the United States in the meantime would have a shortage of double what it now is, or 4,000,000 tons, and against that the 300,000 tons produced in the Philippine Islands would be of no consequence whatever.

I also call attention to the testimony of Mr. Oxnard, the president of the American Beet Sugar Association. He says:

Perhaps it may be well to draw attention to one or two features of the industry:

1. Its product is a staple of universal consumption and of the readlest sale.
2. The product is a finished article, the sugar being turned out refined and granulated, the manufacturer not being dependent upon the refiners' trust for his market.
3. Competition by home production is so remote as to be scarcely worth consideration. The United States is now compelled to import three-quarters of its consumption, and it would take at least 300 factories of a daily capacity of 500 tons of beets to produce present importation.

pertation.

Regarding the future development and permanency of the beet-sugar industry in the United States, there can be absolutely no doubt for the following reasons:

Of the tropical countries which it is proposed to annex to the United States, Porto Rico is too small to cut any figure, and the Philippine Islands have not the necessary elements for the expansion of the sugar business sufficiently rapid to give any concern to those interested in the production of sugar from beets in this country for the next twenty-five years to come.

There is but little capital in the Philippine Islands to develop or increase sugar production. Even if capital could be secured, it would avail nothing without labor, and it is conceded by all that labor is very scarce in the Philippine Islands and is hardly sufficient for present needs, and that Philippine laborers are generally indolent and only work when they are compelled to earn money to purchase the necessaries of life.

Governor Wright, who was the governor of the Philippine Islands for several years, is thoroughly informed and has closely studied the sugar question. Testifying before the Senate committee, he said:

The sugar industry, in my opinion, can not be very largely developed in the Philippine Islands. Of course it can be increased considerably, but it can not be made a rival to other countries which produce sugar on a large scale so long as the present policy of the United States is continued as to the exclusion of the Chinese labor from that country. In other words, the native Filipino laborer is largely engaged in raising rice and food products, aside from sugar, and in gathering hemp and copra, and there is not a very great amount of labor there available for sugar raising on a large and profitable scale.

The average annual production of tobacco in the Philippine

The average annual production of tobacco in the Philippine Islands is 20,000,000 pounds. In 1905 the State of Kentucky produced in round numbers 228,000,000 pounds of tobacco, and in the United States 623,000,000 pounds of tobacco were pro-There are a number of Congressional districts duced in 1905. in the various tobacco States each of which produce more tobacco than is produced in the whole of the Philippine Islands. The export leaf last year was 10,000,000 pounds, and not a single pound of it came to the United States. It would seem, therefore, that with absolute free trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands American tobacco is more likely to go to the Philippine Islands than Philippine Island tobacco come to the United States.

The United States produced in 1905, in round numbers, seven billions and a half of cigars, and the Philippine export product to all ports of the world was 81,000,000 cigars, of which only 167,693 cigars came to the United States, and the bulk of these were sold from the Philippine concession at the St. Louis Exposition, and largely as a matter of trial and experiment. The average annual increase for the past ten years in the production and consumption of cigars in the United States has been 327,753,188, or more than four times the entire export product of the Philippine Islands to all parts of the world last year, and 1,955 times as much as the entire importation into the United States from the Philippine Islands last year.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in his report, made a very appropriate and pertinent statement when he said "The bulk of the cigars produced in the Philippine Islands could not be sold in the American market at any price, even if Philippine cigars were admitted customs duty free into the United States." According to the last annual report of the Philippine Commission, the provinces of Isabela and Cagayan produced the only tobacco fit for use in the manufacture of the better quality of cigars and cigarettes.

It is clear, therefore, that if the entire export product of Philippine tobacco should come to the United States, the effect would be imperceptible, based upon the production of 16,000,000 pounds total exports from the Philippine Islands and about 700,000,000 pounds produced in this country. Two dangers however, are repeatedly magnified by those who are opposed to the proposed legislation. One is the fear of increased product and the other the cheap labor of the Orient. As I have said before, little or no tobacco is exported from the Philippine Islands, except from the provinces of Isabela and Cagayan, and that goes mostly to Spain and Japan; and all disinterested persons seem to agree that there is not the slightest ground to fear any greatly increased area or production in the remaining islands of the archipelago. It has been demonstrated beyond doubt that good tobacco can not be grown within 20 miles of the seacoast, unless it be in some valley so protected by mountains as not to feel the effect of the salt air.

The report of the Philippine Commission shows that the small acreage of the Philippine Islands available for agriculture, being only about 9½ per cent of the total acreage, and the insignificance of the industry compared with other export products of the islands render it impossible that the production could be materially increased in many years, if, indeed, it is ever much increased. I know of no better authority on the tobacco question in the Philippines than Hon. E. J. Hill, Representative in Congress from the Fourth district of Connecticut, who has twice visited the Philippine Islands and made a careful study of the tobacco industry. He says:

There is absolutely no danger whatever to the United States from the competition of the Philippine Islands in any line of the tobacco industry. So far as leaf tobacco is concerned, I call the attention of the Members to the fact that of 16,276,266 pounds exported from the Philippine Islands last year 13,455,065 pounds went to Spain and not a pound to the United States; indeed, practically all of this tobacco went to Spain and to the monopoly countries of Europe, and it is a striking comment upon the fears of any grower in this country that Philippine tobacco will supplant his product that Mr. Shiffer, of the United Cigar Manufacturers Company, when asked before the committee whether in his enormous product of 400,000,000 cigars a year his company had ever imported and manufactured any Philippine tobacco, he replied that they had not. He admitted that they were looking for Habana and Sumatra, but that he had never even experimented with Philippine tobacco. Philippine tobacco.

In order to show the acreage and production of tobacco in the United States in 1905, I submit a table from Supplement of United States Crop Reporter, which, among other things, shows that in Kentucky there were 275,874 acres put in tobacco that year, and the production amounted to 228,975,420 pounds, which is more than a third of all the tobacco produced in the United States, and I may say also that not a single Kentucky tobacco producer or a single Kentucky cigar manufacturer has been before the committee or in Washington to oppose the passage of the bill, which passed the House of Representatives and is now in the Senate Committee on the Philippines, and which bill is the same as the amendment now proposed by me.

The table I have referred to is as follows:

The only remaining product mentioned in the pending bill is rice. History shows that the rice crop was the only cultivated crop, as far as can be ascertained, produced by the natives when the Philippine Islands were first discovered by the Spanish explorer Magellan in 1521. For more than three centuries subsequent to the establishment of Spanish sovereignty rice was the principal product. Surplus crops were produced and rice was exported in large quantities, but in later years the cultiva-tion of hemp, sugar, and tobacco have caused the cultivation of rice to be diminished, and last year $7,000,000 worth of rice was imported to the Philippine Islands and only 1,500,000 acres were under rice cultivation.

There is so little danger that the rice producers of the United States will be interfered with by the Filipinos, who now purchase from foreign countries annually millions of dollars' worth of rice for home consumption and who would have to ship rice over 6,000 miles and pay the freight to compete with the American rice producer, that it is not necessary to discuss this subject at length.

Mr. President, I have consumed much more time than I expected and made a more comprehensive argument than I intended. The Committee on the Philippines not having reported the bill which passed the House of Representatives, there has been no opportunity in the Senate to discuss the subjects to which I have referred, and my excuse for occupying so much time is that I believe Senators will be favorable to the proposed legislation as Representatives were favorable to it when they have opportunities for investigation and consideration.

The bill to provide for the establishment of an agricultural bank in the Philippine Islands will, when it becomes a law, be beneficial to the Filipinos, and especially to those engaged in agricultural pursuits, and justice and fair play demand the legislation provided in the amendment offered by me, which was so clearly and so strongly advocated by President Roosevelt in his message to the Congress of the United States, when he said:

I carnestly recommend that the tariff now imposed by the Dingley bill upon the products of the Philippine Islands be entirely removed except the tariff on sugar and tobacco, and that that tariff be reduced to 25 per cent of the present rates under the Dingley Act. That after July 1, 1909, the tariff upon tobacco and sugar produced in the Philippine Islands be entirely removed, and that free trade between the islands and the United States in the products of each country then be provided for by law.

If we are to follow up what has been done so well by a large majority of the Members of the House of Representatives: if majority of the Members of the House of Representatives; if we are to benefit the people of the Philippine Islands by establishing a bank to aid those engaged in agriculture, then I say we ought also to pass the bill relieving the Filipinos of the unjust burden of tariff taxation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire merely to say now, as I tried to say before, that this amendment, if pressed and debated, would lead at this stage of the session to the defeat of the entire legislation. We can pass for the benefit of the Philippine Islands the agricultural bank bill. Everyone is in favor of it. But to attach this amendment to that bill would simply be to kill both propositions. I should like very much, for the sake of the islands, to save one of them. This amendment is hostile to the bank bill. It can not come up here properly be-

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President; I have the floor now.
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TALIAFERRO in the chair).

The Senator from Massachusetts declines to yield.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it can not come here properly, for it is clearly unconstitutional in this form. This body has no power to originate tariff legislation. We can only deal with tariff legislation on a House bill. A House bill is not before us. I wish it were. I am absolutely in favor of it; but being unable to get it at this time of the session, I prefer to do something for the islands, rather than defeat all legislation. Therefore, Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky upon the table; and pending that motion, I move that the Senate proceed to consider executive business.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to withhold that motion for a moment, because I desire to say

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Kentucky?
